Harrison, Dr. Elisha	b. 1762 - d. 24 Aug 1819	56 yrs.	R33/16
The National Intelligencer, Wednesday, August 25, 1819
At his residence in this city between the hours of 3 and 4 a.m. of yesterday (Aug. 24) after a short but painful illness, Dr. Elisha Harrison, in the 57th year of his age. The funeral will take place this morning at 10 o'clock. His relatives and friends are requested to attend without further notice.
Old Records, A.G.O., show his name, with the rank of Surgeon's Mate, in certain records of accounts, disbursements, and receipts, which show he was in service in the Maryland Line during parts, at least of the years 1781 and 1782, but the exact period of his service is not stated. A certain Revolutionary War record shows the name Elisha Harrison on a list of officers and enlisted men of various states and the Continental Army. On that list his name appears under the sub-heading of Maryland, with the rank of Surgeon's Mate. Another Revolutionary War record shows an account of Elisha Harrison to the State of Maryland for goods, cash, etc.

TOMB OF DR. ELISHA HARRISON REDEDICATED BY D.C. D.A.R.
The tomb of Dr. Elisha Harrison (1762-1819), a Revolutionary War surgeon, was rededicated on June 13, 1983, in a ceremony conducted under the auspices of the Dolley Madison Chapter of the D.A.R.
Dr. Harrison was a surgeon with the Fourth Regiment, Maryland Line, and served from his commissioning on October 15, 1781 until his retirement from the Army on January 1, 1783. He was subsequently an original member of the Society of the Cincinnati and a founder of the Medical and Chirurgical Faculty of the State of Maryland and of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia.
Ely, Selden Marvin, "The District of Columbia In The American Revolution and Patriots of the Revolutionary Period Who Are Interred in the District or In Arlington," Columbia Historical Society, Vol 21, pp. 128-154
Doctor Elisha Harrison's remains also repose in Congressional Cemetery. His name is found in the Maryland archives and also in Heitman's, where he is recorded as enlisting in the Fourth Maryland, the 15th of October 1781, and retired 1st of January, 1783. The doctor entered into rest August 26, 1819, aged 59. The site of his original internment is not known, but he was transferred to Congressional Cemetery April, 1823. Part of the chiseling on his monument reads as follows: "A native of Maryland and surgeon in the Revolutionary War."

His Eccentric Life, Lonesome Death, and the Estate He Left

Mr. Robert V. Harrison, for many years known to our citizens, especially as having been an active member of the old volunteer fire department, attached to the Columbia engine, and for about six years a member of the old Auxiliary Guard--the police force of Washington at one time--died on the 29th of May at his residence on Ohio avenue, between 14th and 15th streets, having been sick for several days. The deceased had lived alone in the house where he died for some years past, and it is thought that he was sick for about ten days previous to his death, and was doctoring himself. He, however, became so weak that he made his way downstairs to the front door, and calling some of his neighbors they discovered his condition and took him back to bed, and Dr. J. Frank Hartigan was summoned and attended him. While he was on his death-bed there was some talk about there having been several hundred dollars about the house. After his death, Mr. F.W. Gollady, who resides in that neighborhood, suggested that as there were no relatives near that he would apply for letters of administration, but after the funeral, which was conducted by Mr. R.W. Barker, undertaker, Dr. Hartigan applied to the Probate Court for letters of collection which were granted. Dr. Hartigan found that the estate was much larger than any of the friends of the deceased supposed. He ascertained that Golladay had deposited to his own credit, in Riggs & Co's bank, about $5,000 in gold; also that the deceased held U.S. registered bonds to the amount of several thousand dollars. Yesterday, by his attorney, Mr. J.G. Payne, D. Hartigan petitioned for a rule on Golladay to show cause why the money should not be transferred from the account of Golladay to his (H's) account, and service was made yesterday. The Probate Court has already directed publication to be made, in order to find the legal heirs. The deceased, was the reputed son of Mrs. Harrison who kept a house at the corner of 10th and C streets, and who died several years since, leaving, it is stated, the bulk of her estate to the deceased. The deceased learned in early life the trade of a blacksmith, and after obtaining majority he served six years on the police, but since then has been engaged in no particular business, evidently having enough of this world's goods to live on. Although in some respects a singular man, averse to speaking of his business, he was one who secured many friends, and was familiarly known as Bob Harrison.

Today, in the Probate Court, Mr. F.W. The Robert V. Harrison Estate

A Decision for the Casseens

Yesterday Judge MacArthur, before whom the second contest for the estate of the late Robert V. Harrison was argued about six weeks since, (As reported in The Star at the time) made a decision. It will be remembered that the decedent, the reputed son of Mrs. Harrison, who for years kept houses on C and 13th streets of questionable character, died on Ohio avenue in May 1877, leaving a personal estate of some $6,000 and the real estate property on which he died. Dr. J.F. Hartigan, who attended him in his illness, as a creditor obtained administration of the estate and advertised for the heirs. Miss Hamilton and sister put in a claim that Mrs. Harrison was a daughter of Edward Hamilton, a brother to their father, Eben T. Hamilton, of Loudon county, Va. The government claimed that Mrs. Harrison was "Cinthy" Ashford, of Alexandria, who with her sister fell into loose ways while working at the cotton factory near Four Mile Run; that she became the mistress of Mr. Harrison, and after living with him a few years in Alexandria, came to this city and opened a house of assignation, and that her younger sister was the mother of the deceased by Robert Rutherford, and she being poor, let Bob with Mrs. Harrison to raise. This case was decided by Judge Olin, December 31st, 1878, adversely to Miss Hamilton and sister. The present claimants--Murphy et al. then petitioned for the estate, claiming that Jane A. Murphy, Mary F. Fox and Anna Caseen are the children and heirs at law of Rachel Caseen, daughter of Thomas Ashford, brother of Nancy Ashford. Nancy, they claim, was Mrs. Harrison. A large amount of testimony was taken. The case was argued before Judge MacArthur in December last by the Messrs. Claughton for petitioners and Wells for the government, and yesterday the court decided that the proof showed that Robert Harrison was the son of Cynthia Ashford, who intermarried with one Harrison, and that the female petitioners were the grandchildren of Thomas Ashford, the brother of Cynthia Ashford, and they were entitled to the estate. District Attorney Corkhill noted an appeal to the General Term.

Harrison, Gen. William H.	d. 7 Apr 1841		Public Vault ®
William Henry Harrison rode to his inauguration on horseback through a rainstorm. Hatless and coatless, he was sworn in on the East Portico of the Capitol, and then gave a speech which took an hour and forty minutes to read. After attending three inaugural balls, he took to his bed with a chill. This turned to pneumonia, and he died a month after taking office.

The Funeral
What all the pomps and triumphs of our lives But legacies in blossom!                      Young When, but four weeks since, it was our welcome task to lay before our readers a sketch of the joyous scenes which marked the Inauguration of beloved Chief Magistrate, how little did we—alas! How little did any one—anticipate that our columns would so soon be occupied with the particulars of his Funeral Obsequies? It seems, even yet, but as a dream—some false, but affrighting vision. Could the deep solicitude of the best and the wisest men—could the fond, the sanguine hopes of innumerable personal and political friends—could the prayers, the sincere and fervent prayers, of a multitude of Christian people—could the undivided affection of almost an entire nation, have secured to one human being prolonged life and unimpaired health and felicity, these would assuredly have been the lot of William Henry Harrison. Never, since the times of Washington, has any one man so concentrated upon himself the love and confidence of the American People; and, never, since the melancholy day which shrouded a nation in mourning for his sudden death, has any event produced so general and so profound a sensation of surprise and sorrow. So brief had been the late President's illness, that now, as in the case of Washington, there had scarce been time for us to begin to fear, when the stunning blow of the reality fell upon us like the stroke of thunder from a cloudless sky. Men looked aghast, and staggered, as if amazed by something they could scarce believe. But it was true. He who, with open beaming countenance passed along our streets in the joy of his heart—he, the welcome, the long-expected, the desired, on whom all eyes were fastened, to whom all hearts went out, who had within him more stirring subjects of exhilarating consciousness than have met in any single bosom since Washington was crowned with wreaths as he came back from Yorktown, was on Wednesday last, within one month, "one little month," borne along the same crowded avenue—crowded, not as before with a jubilant People gathered from every quarter of the country, but with sincerely sorrowing multitudes following his bier. As the shouts which then rent the air were the free spontaneous expression of the love and joy of freemen, delighting to confer their highest honors on one whom they believed to have richly deserved them, so, now, the tears which fell from the eyes of woman, the sighs and looks of grief of gray-headed men, the general, universal aspect of public sorrow, were the unbought, the unpurchasable tribute of a bereaved People to public virtue and devoted patriotism. This was not the momentary gush of feelings wrought upon by the pomp and circumstance of a funeral procession. It was not the sable car, the nodding plumes, the slow and mournful array—it was the event itself—the loss of such a man, at such a time, which drew forth these expressions of public feeling. They will be substantially the same in every part of the country. As it was here, so it will be every where. When the words "THE PRESIDENT IS DEAD" met the ear, the man of business dropped his pen—the artisan dropped his tools—children looked in the faces of their parents, and wives into the countenances of their husbands, and the wail of sorrow arose as if each had lost a parent or some near and dear friend. Could Gen. Harrison now look down on the land he loved, he might, indeed, "read his history in a Nation's eyes;" and those, whose bosoms glow and struggle with high purposes and strong desires for their country's good, may learn in what they now behold, wherever they turn their eyes, how glorious a reward awaits the memory of those who faithfully serve their country.

But, while we mourn ourselves, there is no cause of mourning on behalf of the deceased. The ray of his country's gratitude, though late, shone in full splendor on his departing hour. He had attained all that man can reach of human honor. Freely, spontaneously, unanimously, had his countrymen placed him in the highest seat they had to give. He had done enough, during the brief time he occupied it, to show that, as he had passed with honor through many lesser trusts, so he was equal to this last and highest trial to which his character and powers could be subjected. As much as he had opportunity to do, he did well. The candid, even among his enemies, (if there be any who do not now blush to own that title) will admit this. But he had not so far entered on the tempestuous sea of public affairs as to expose himself to new and personal enmities from the discharge of his duty. Before the storm had time to gather—before envy, and detraction, and party fury had begun to muster their stores of coming vengeance to pour without mercy upon his head—that venerable head, silvered with the frosts of age and of long and arduous devotion to his country's service, is gently laid on the pillow of death. In that sacred sanctuary, which nothing earthly can invade, he sleeps in safety from the strife of tongues. His name, free from the semblance of a spot and illustrious in the halo of an imperishable fame, is delivered over to history as a sacred trust, to be written on the same page with that of those pure patriots who, in every age and every land, have been the disinterested friends of human freedom and happiness. The beautiful union of private excellence with public virtue has never been more winningly exhibited than in the case of Gen. Harrison. His frank simplicity and freedom from all ostentation—his attachment to his soldiers—his urbanity and condescension to men of humble fortune—his charity to the poor—his open-hearted and open-handed hospitality—his incorruptible honesty in every pecuniary trust—his uniform, unwavering devotion to his country, illustrated in his dying moments by the expression of his attachment to the Constitution, and sanctified by the sentiments of personal piety—unite to entitle him to the inscription on his tom of "The Good President."
