Obituary

That "we all do fade as a leaf," is a sentiment which, since the days of the Prophet, has been, by each revolving season, brought home to mankind in all its force and beauty. Autumn comes with its saddened charms, its pale leaf and scattered flower, again to remind us of our mortality; yes, even the "winds have a voice and give eloquent teachings;" yet man is unmoved by the silent language of Nature; "line upon line" must be given to convince us that earth is not our home. Such a monition has been recently felt, while following to the grave the remains of one fallen at our side in all the pride of health and manhood --the late lamented Ingle. Those who knew him best, need no testimonials of his worth; deeply and permanently are they written in the hearts of those who were dear to him. Yet there were traits in his character not so generally known, which, in this day of speculation and fraud, it were well to recall for the benefit of those entering upon the stage of life. We allude more especially to his unwavering integrity, ever daring to be true, feeling no exigence to require any departure from it; likewise, his unflinching stand in behalf of sound principles. As a business-man, in all his designs, to be right, and to do right, may almost be said to have been with him a passion. There are few, if any, who have a higher standard of moral excellence. No motive no force of sophistry, no seduction of influence, could induce him to turn aside for a moment from the beacon-light which guided him. Engaged till recently in an extensive and arduous business, he yet was foremost in every call of humanity, hazarding life and fortune in the path of duty. When the ravages of cholera made desolate many a heart in our city, none were more ardent in planning, none more willing to execute, measures for the relief of the sick and dying. Emphatically he was a workingman; punctual to all his engagements, he never caused, as is to often the case, others to wait for him, and in this respect the various benevolent associations to which he was attached have experienced a loss not easily repaired. With these excellences of character, may be added a veneration and respect for the religion of the savior. Feeling religion to be the only safeguard of the State, and that mere knowledge without it is of but little avail, he sought for that mere knowledge without it is of but little avail, he sought for that in the education of his children, endeavoring to bring them up in the fear of God. The constancy with which his seat at church was filled is remarkable, while his means and time were freely spent in advancing the interests of the Gospel. Although not a communicant, we know that his reasons for not connecting himself with the church were creditable to himself, though by us deemed erroneous.

That such a man should have been respected, is but a natural consequence of a life so spent; but, for the intense solicitude manifested by the community during his last illness, we were not prepared. Yet it is gratifying to our nature to feel that it was so. May we never be regardless of those teachings which his sudden death brings home to the heart; and, while we press onward in life's journey, let us occasionally pause and "ponder well our paths;" let the young, especially those engaged in the active pursuits of business, be careful at the outset of their career to have a high standard of duty, and, as the pestilence avoid every departure from truth, that, like our departed friend, they may leave a character unstained and without reproach, at peace with God and man. E.M.T.

Another Old Citizen Gone

John P. Ingle, Esq., one of the oldest and most respected citizens of Washington, died this morning early, aged 71 years. Mr. Ingle's death was sudden. On Saturday morning, when he got up, he felt well as usual, and after eating a hearty breakfast went to attend to his business at the office of the Franklin Insurance Company, of which he was president. He was there taken suddenly ill of inflammation of the bowels, and was taken home, and died as above stated. Mr. Ingle has, during his long life, held many prominent and responsible positions, as president of the Patriotic Bank, cashier of the Bank of Washington, etc., etc. Mr. Ingle has held various municipal offices with much credit.

The Evening Star, February 4, 1863

John P. Ingle, Esq.

The Managers of the Bible Society in this city held a meeting at the rooms of the Depository yesterday, in order to take some action in relation to the death of Mr. Ingle, who was at the time of his death President of the Washington City Bible Society. Resolutions of respect to the memory of deceased were unanimously adopted, and as a further mark of respect the Managers attended the funeral in a body.

Dr. J.E. Ingle Rites To Be Tomorrow
Episcopal Clergyman Was Member of Old Washington Family
 Funeral services for Dr. Julian Edward Ingle, 91 years old, one of the oldest Episcopal clergymen in the United States, native of this city and member of an old Washington family, who died in Raleigh, N.C., yesterday will be conducted in Hines' funeral parlors, 2901 Fourteenth street, tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock. Interment will be in Congressional Cemetery. Preliminary funeral services are being held in Raleigh this afternoon, the services being conducted by Bishop Joseph Blount, assisted by Episcopal clergymen of Raleigh.

Dr. Ingle was born in a house which occupied the site of the present House Office Building here.

Dr. Ingle, who had made his home in Raleigh since his retirement from the active ministry in 1910, is survived by his widow and one son, Bassett Ingle of New York.

His education was received at Rittenhouse Academy, Washington, the Episcopal High School, Alexandria; the University of Virginia, and the General Theological Seminary, New York. His first assignment was at St. Paul's Church, Baltimore, in 1864, where he was assistant rector. He was also chaplain of the Church Home in Baltimore; later he became rector at Ascension Church, Westminster, Md. and Trinity Church, Woodbridge, N.J.

Accepting a call to Holy Innocents Church, Henderson in 1879, he remained in charge of that parish for 30 years.

The diocese of North Carolina conferred many honors on him. He served as dean of the diocese for a number of years. He was also examining chaplain, secretary of the diocese of North Carolina for over 25 years, and delegate to three triennial general conventions of the church. He was a trustee of St. Mary's School and St. Augustine's School.

The National Intelligencer, Saturday, October 5, 1844
 On Thursday, at eleven o'clock a.m., Mrs. Mary Ingle, relict of Mr. Henry Ingle, in the 79th year of her age. This excellent and beloved "mother in Israel" was sick but a few days. Death did not, however, find her unprepared. She had long since "set her house in order," and just after prayer by a dear Christian friend from a distance, her dying bed surrounded by her children and her children's children, she peacefully closed a long and well-spent life, in the full confidence of a glorious immortality, leaving a bright example of Christian character for their imitation, and the recollection of her many virtues, that will long be cherished. Her funeral will take place from the residence of her son, John P. Ingle, this day, (Saturday,) at eleven o'clock a.m., to which the friends of the family are invited.

Will of Mary Ingle, of City and Co. of Washington (dtd. Oct. 2, 1844, probated Oct. 12, 1844; Book 5, pp. 375-377; O.S. 2507; Box 17)

------	-------------	-----	------------

The recent death of Mrs. John P. Ingle obliges us to mourn the loss of one who had endeared herself to a large circle of friends by all those noble qualities which are the characteristics of a Christian. As a wife, daughter, mother, and sister, her loss is only the more keenly felt that it can never be repaired; and those who knew her best can alone tell how much they have to mourn. Although for months death has been approaching her with rapid steps she has looked with calmness and resignation for the time of her departure; and her constant prayer, when the hand of affliction was laid upon her family by her sickness, was that they might be sustained in the hour of their trouble by Him who can alone send consolation to the wounded heart. When we look around we see a void in the circle of those friends whose society it was our happiness to cultivate. But while we sympathize with the bereaved family, we hope the pleasing consolation that her troubles have forever ceased, and that she has gone to that home where sickness and sorrow enter not.
