On Friday morning, 15th inst. in the 45th year of her age, Mrs. Anne Lucinda Jones, consort of Gen. Walter Jones of this city. Daughter of the late Charles Lee, Attorney General of the United States under the administration of Washington and Adams, and grand-daughter, by the mother's side, of Richard Henry Lee, Mrs. Jones inherited a full share of the talents for which her family were long remarkable. To such talents were united qualities and endowments to give them the highest effect in the embellishment and diffusive utility of life. With uncommon promptitude, activity, and energy of mind, irrepressible ardor in the pursuit of its objects, a quick susceptibility of every generous and noble and tender impulse, the whole force of her character seemed concentrated in a soul-inspiring, elevated, and enlightened piety, in a pure self-devotion to all the complicated duties of her station as Wife, Mother, Friend, and Neighbor, and in a disinterested abandonment of selfish aims and gratifications, very rarely found in one so eminently gifted by nature and education, and solicited by opportunity, to partake the innocent gaieties and enjoyments of the world. But it would be superfluous to dwell on the excellencies of a character sufficiently known and valued in this community; and why, alas! recount her virtues and endowments but to sum up the losses suffered by her death. Losses extensively and deeply felt by society, but unspeakable, irreparable, to a husband long accustomed to confide to her the dearest interest of his heart, to eleven surviving children, most of them at that tender age which they can look for nothing of this world to supply the care of such a mother. The funeral from the residence of Gen. Jones, on Capitol Hill, tomorrow (Wednesday, 20th) at 10 o'clock.

Benjamin A. Jones Missing

It is Feared that He Has Committed Suicide

His Farewell Letter to His Wife--

An Unsuccessful Search for His Body in the Eastern Branch--

A Great Sufferer From Neuralgia

Friends of Mr. Benjamin A. Jones, a well-known citizen of East Washington, were searching the shores of the Anacostia today for his body without finding it. The reason for the search was the disappearance of Mr. Jones under circumstances that led his family to the conclusion that he had committed suicide. For some time past he had suffered from neuralgia, and his sufferings had been so intense recently that it is thought

His Mind Was Affected.

Yesterday afternoon, Mr. Jones was very quiet and had but little to say to anyone. He wrote a letter, as he said, to Maj. Goodloe, his superior officer at the marine barracks. He said that he would send the letter to Maj. Goodloe if he did not feel well enough this morning to go to his work. Before leaving his home he took from his pockets his watch and chain and other valuables and left them with his Elks pin in his room. Soon after leaving home he was seen to mail the letter in a letter box hanging to a lamp post. Later in the evening he was seen on 8th street southeast, and the last time he was seen he was going in the direction of the river, walking near the marine barracks. His failure to return home last evening alarmed his wife and children, who were unable to account for his absence. They did not know where to go nor what to do. In vain they waited for his return.

His Letter to His Wife

It was shortly after 9 o'clock when the postman came to the door and handed in a letter. On the envelope was written in her husband's handwriting the address of his almost frantic wife. The kind-hearted woman was almost afraid to break the seal of the envelope, for she naturally feared the worst. The letter was written in a shaky hand and conveyed the startling news that when she received it the writer would be dead. There were other statements in the letter which were intended only for the wife to read. Mrs. Jones read the letter and following the advice of her husband she put it in the fire. The sad news thus received had a serious effect on her and today she is in great distress.

The Missing Man

is about forty-nine years old and was nearly six feet high. When he left home he wore a dark overcoat and a slouch hat. He has been connected with the marine corps for nearly twenty years and was an enlisted man until about four years ago. He has been paymaster's clerk under Major Goodloe for a number of years. Mr. Jones was a member of the lodge of Elks and was well and favorably known in East Washington. His family reside at No. 761 7th street southeast, where his mother-in-law, Mrs. Williams, keeps a boarding house. Mrs. Jones was a widow when she married Mr. Jones, her maiden name and married name being Williams. Her first husband was drowned in the Potomac off the pleasure yacht Ella Treadwell. The police have been notified of Mr. Jones' disappearance and requested to search the river for his body.

Pay Clerk Jones' Case

He Is Still Missing and Is Said To Be

Short In His Accounts

Suspicion Thrown on Him By Discoveries In

The Fourth Auditors Office--

Maj. Goodloe Says Jones Was All Right--

The Police Think He Is Alive

The police patrol boat was out early this morning dragging for the body of Benjamin A. Jones, who disappeared from his home, No. 701 7th street southeast, Christmas evening, as heretofore mentioned in The Star. Up to this morning no tidings of the missing man had been received by his family. The hat he wore on the evening he disappeared was picked up not far from the arsenal wharf by Captain Bailey of the tug Teuton. Mrs. Jones has no doubt now that her husband carried out the suicidal purpose indicated in the letter she received from him Thursday morning. The letter, the fact of his leaving his jewelry at home and the finding of his hat leaves no doubt in her mind.

A Reported Shortage

Meanwhile a new element has appeared in the case by a report that Jones was short in his accounts. He was clerk to Maj. Goodloe, paymaster at the Marine barracks. The amount said to have been unaccounted for, so far as the investigation has gone, is about $3,000. Suspicion has been directed against the missing man by his disappearance and the discovery at the Treasury department almost simultaneously of what appears to have been a systematic attempt at fraud. A clerk in the fourth auditor's office observed the regularity of certain erasures on the rolls of marines paid at the Brooklyn navy yard, and to the large number of alleged enlistments of men in the service from San Francisco, whose term of service had expired. Inquiry showed that the enlistments were not in San Francisco at all, but in New York. The law allows payment to enlisted men when discharged of a sum sufficient to defray their expenses to the place where they enlisted. Thus by alleging that the men discharged at Brooklyn were enlisted at San Francisco the allowance to each man would be about $133. So far only the Brooklyn navy yard rolls for one year have been examined and some $3,000 is discovered on these rolls to have been fraudulently obtained.

When Auditor Whitaker was asked about the alleged frauds by a Star reporter that Major Goodloe's weekly statement of cash balances for last week has not been received. This statement is usually made out each Saturday and forwarded to the Navy department whence it is sent to the Treasury for verification. Up to last Saturday the accounts had been regular in coming in and were found to be correct.

Major Goodloe Thinks Mr. Jones' Accounts Are All Right

Mr. Jones, as heretofore published in The Star, was paymaster's clerk under Major Goodloe at the marine barracks. Major Goodloe told a Star reporter this afternoon that he had not yet examined Jones' accounts, but he was positive that they would be found all right. He said he did not see how Mr. Jones could have taken any money unless it was a very few dollars and then the money would be missed at once. The major said that Mr. Jones was an excellent clerk, having held positions in the surgeon general's office, the Navy department and other offices. He was in the war and has been an enlisted man for a number of years. He does not think that Jones has committed suicide.

A Splash in the Water

John Rick and William Campbell, who reside at 6th and B streets s.e., were crossing the navy-yard bridge Christmas night, on their way to Uniontown, when they heard a splash, such as would be made by a man going overboard. It was then about 9 o'clock. When they arrived at the house of George Frederick, in Uniontown, they told him what they had heard while crossing the bridge. Mr. Frederick, told them that it was probably a fish and they thought no more of the matter until they heard of Mr. Jones' disappearance.

Incredulous Policemen

The police do not believe that Jones drowned himself, although his hat has been found in the water and the splash was heard Christmas night. So far as the finding of the hat is concerned, they say that that indicates nothing, as a man intending to disappear and leave the impression that he was drowned, would do just such a thing as to throw his hat overboard or leave his clothes on the river bank.

The Fruitless Search For The Body

The police boat has been searching the Eastern branch all day for Jones' body, but up to 2:30 o'clock without success. A number of small boats containing friends of the missing man were also out, but their search was also fruitless.

Mr. Jones was a man of nervous temperament and was easily excited. He has suffered from neuralgia and catarrh of the stomach for several years, and it is said had been

In The Habit of Using Morphine.

Some of his friends think that he had been using morphine on Christmas day and that he has wandered off into the woods. Mrs. Jones is an invalid and the disappearance of her husband it is said had made her condition serious. Concerning the finding of the hat it was stated this afternoon that Mrs. Jones has not yet seen it, although it was stated this morning that it had been positively identified as the hat of the missing man by other persons.

Jones Falsified Payrolls

Major Goodloe's Accounts Suspended

At The Treasury

He Will Have To Make Good the $2,600

Involved In The Transactions Of His Pay

Clerk--Meanwhile The Unavailing Search

For The Body Of Jones Goes On

If Pay Clerk Benjamin A. Jones put in an appearance at Maj. Goodloe's office this afternoon one of the first conundrums which the major would insist upon having answered would be "Where are the $2,700?"

In that inquiry is the real cases, it is believed, of Mr. Jones' prolonged absence. His accounts show him to be a defaulter and when the numerous petty pilferings have been added up the figures will be very near the sum mentioned. The investigation of the pay rolls which have passed through Mr. Jones' hands during the two years he was employed by the paymaster was completed yesterday by Mr. Owen, an expert accountant in the fourth auditor's office, and there is now no reason for anyone asking why Jones disappeared. Good naturedly reticent over the matter is Major Goodloe. His first duty in this matter is to the Navy department and this afternoon he transmitted to Secretary Tracy a statement of the fact that the ten days' leave granted Benjamin A. Jones was up on Thursday last and that Mr. Jones has not even yet returned to the office. The report probably contains brief information as to the financial hole which Mr. Jones left behind him.

What They Say at the Treasury Department

At the Treasury department Auditor Whitaker said that the investigation was closed so far as he was concerned. Jones' manipulations had given Major Goodloe fictitious credits for various amounts--in all about $2,600--and to this extent the major's accounts would be suspended until deposits were made to cover the overdrawn total.

The manner in which Jones, it is charged, falsified the pay rolls was fully described in Saturday's Star, and there is now little question as to Jones' criminality. One of the most interestingly peculiar things in connection with the fraud is the fact that the defaulter had marked with an asterisk in pencil each of the items which he had raised. The crookedness has been going on almost from the beginning of Jones' connection with the marine corps pay office. Previous to his engagement therein he was a clerk in the office of the commandant at the navy yard, and while there built up for himself a first-class reputation of efficiency and integrity.

Jones' Habits

The fact was developed this morning by a Star reporter that Jones was addicted to gambling in a minor way. The bartender at Coxen's saloon, opposite the marine barracks, said it was not an uncommon thing for regular frequenters of the house to play cards and he had frequently seen Jones take a hand. At another saloon it was stated that Jones occasionally played cribbage there, in fact played there on Christmas night, and remarked before leaving (at about 8 o'clock). "This is the last game of 'crib' I'll ever play." On being asked to explain his utterance he modified it by saying, "well, it's the last I'll play tonight anyhow."

Information as to Jones' habits is difficult of access. The proprietors of those saloons frequented by him are very unanimously "out" when a reporter makes inquiry as to their whereabouts and those who are temporarily in charge of the liquors and the free lunches declare with strange and loudly accentuated positiveness that they were not on duty either on Christmas night or on the evening before. In a vague way they remember that there once used to be a Benjamin A. Jones, but beyond that they never go; their memory faies them at all critical points. Somebody has been telling them that silence is golden, and they are evidently engaged in dumb efforts to extract the metal.

Mrs. Jones Thinks Her Husband Drowned Himself

Mrs. Jones still is firmly fixed in the belief that her husband has drowned himself. He stated in the note which she received, and the probabilities are that there was more in that brief letter than has been made public. Only two persons besides the man who wrote it have seen that note--Mrs. Jones and Frank Schwartz, the Anhauser-Busch agent in this city. Presumably the letter was destroyed. Mr. Schwartz was not in his office today when a Star reporter called, so the rumor that the note was still in his possession could not be verified or upset.

The hat which was found near the arsenal by Capt. Bailey of the tug Teuton is in the possession of Mrs. Jones, and so is the other hat which it was intimated had been worn by the fugitive in his flight while the other piece of head gear was left to indicate suicide. Lots of people are very skeptical as to the suicide theory.

A Man That Two Boys Saw In The Woods

No official notice has been received by the police of alleged wrong doing on the part of Pay Clerk Jones. His stepson called at police headquarters this morning to give the police what he thought was a clue to the whereabouts of Mr. Jones. He told Inspector Swindells that a boy named Gallagher and a companion were in the neighborhood of Bennings Friday gunning. While passing through the woods they saw a man with a full bear lying on the ground. Thinking the man was dead they were afraid to touch him and went on through the woods. After a short time they returned and the man was still there. Again they left and later in the day came across the man again. This time he was sitting up with his hands to his head as though he was suffering pain.

Mr. Williams, the stepson, could not tell where Gallagher was to be found, but promised to find out something more about it and let the police know.

Still Searching The River For Jones' Body

The police boat was out on the branch yesterday searching for Mr. Jones' body. Large hooks were used and almost every inch of the branch in that locality was searched without success and the harbormaster gave up the search for a bad job. He does not think that Mr. Jones' body is in the water.

The Evening Star, December 31, 1889

No Clue to B.A. Jones

The Whereabouts and Fate of the Missing

Pay Clerk Still a Mystery

The closest investigation by the police and by relatives of the missing man has failed to develop any clue to the whereabouts of Benjamin A. Jones, ex-clerk to Paymaster Goodloe of the Marine corps. The supply of rumors and theories, too, has been exceedingly small. Without having any apparent ground on which to base such a conclusion the police declare most emphatically that Jones did not commit suicide, and the old "salts" who man the police boat are more than satisfied that he has not followed the legendary McGinty on his chilly journey to the bottom of the "say."

A Worthless Clue

Jones' stepson, young Williams, spent the greater part of yesterday in the vicinity of Bennings looking up a clue which promised well for a time. Gallagher, one of the two boys who said, as stated in The Star yesterday, that they saw a man who answered the description of Jones in the Eastern Branch marshes on Friday afternoon was at Jones' late residence this morning and was shown a photograph of the absent one. The boy was very dubious as to whether or not the man he saw resembled the picture, but he said he was sure that the fellow he saw in the marsh had red whiskers. That was proof to Mrs. Jones that the man was not her husband. Gallagher was given car fare to ride to police headquarters so that he might tell Lieut. Swindells what he thought he knew, but at 3 o'clock this afternoon he had not arrived.

Young Williams would have continued his search today, but he was quite sick.

Mrs. Williams, Jones' mother-in-law, is dubious in her belief as to whether Jones is dead or alive.

Liberal In His Cups

Men who were in the habit of associating with Jones in his hours of relaxation say that it was not uncommon thing for that person to spend $5 or $6 in the course of the evening. He had a favorite brand of beer and insisted on having the crowd drink it with him quite frequently.

The Evening Star, March 17, 1890, p. 8

Drowned in Eastern Branch

The Body of the Missing Pay Clerk,

Benj. A. Jones, Found and Identified

The indictment found some weeks ago by the grand jury against Benjamin A. Jones, the defaulting clerk of Paymaster Goodloe, will soon be nolle prossed on a suggestion of the death of the defendant. The badly decomposed body of the missing man was discovered yesterday morning in the Eastern Branch near the end of the Baltimore and Potomac railroad bridge, not far from Bennings, by Capt. Smith, the yard master at Bennings, who notified Sergeant Mulhail. A telephone message was at once sent to Sergeant McCathran at the substation in Uniontown. The corpse was taken from the mud in the branch and conveyed to the morgue in the ninth precinct patrol wagon. At the morgue the body was stripped of its clothing and placed on the table, to be kept there for identification.

The Remains Identified

The body was badly disfigured and the clothing was so muddy that the color of the goods could hardly be distinguished. The articles taken from the pockets of the clothing and a stud taken from the shirt bosom dispelled all doubt as to the identity of the body and afforded proof positive that the remains were those of the missing pay clerk. Among the articles found in the pockets were a pair of eye-glasses, a pocket comb, 40 cents and an advertising match safe that was distributed during the Knights Templar conclave last October.

Mr. Frank Schwartz, an intimate friend of Jones, was satisfied after viewing the articles mentioned that the body was that of his friend.

This morning Mrs. Jones and her son visited Lieut. Kelly's station and identified the study and other articles taken from the clothing. Mrs. Jones' son viewed the body and further satisfied himself that it was that of his stepfather.

Jones' Disappearance on Christmas Day

The missing paymaster's clerk southeast, on Christmas day. He had been suffering from neuralgia during the day and in the afternoon he wrote a letter to his wife before leaving home. He mailed the letter almost within sight of his own home and was afterward seen in a restaurant on 8th street near the marine barracks. He was last seen going in the direction of the Anacostia bridge. That was after dark and that was the last time he was seen alive. Between 8 and 9 o'clock that night three men on their way across the bridge heard a splash, but, on account of the darkness, they could not see whether the body of a person arose to the surface or not. They paid no attention to the sound, but two or three days afterward, when they learned that Jones was missing, recalled the circumstances. The failure of Jones to return home that night greatly distressed his wife and when she received the letter the next morning she was fully convinced that her husband had jumped overboard, for he wrote:

"When this letter reaches you I will be cold and stiff in the Potomac, dead."

The splash heard near the bridge that night was undoubtedly made by Jones' jumping from the bridge. The next morning Jones' slouch hat was picked up off the arsenal pint by the captain of a tug boat.

Prior to his disappearance his honesty had never been questioned, but his accounts were soon afterward examined and found to be more than $3,000 short.

Certificate of Death By Suicide

This morning Coroner Patterson investigated the case and gave a certificate of death by suicide. In looking over the clothing taken from the dead man's body a cuff was found with Jones' name written upon it.

Jones. On May 7th, 1887, at 9:30 p.m., Bessie A. Jones, daughter of Thomas O. and Florence A. Jones, aged 2 years 8 months and 27 days.

Parents, dear, I've crossed the wave
Of Death's deep rolling tide.
To the land beyond the grave
That lies on the other side,
'Twas when evening shade drew nigh
And told of closing day,
I breathed my last faint sigh
And passed from earth away.

Could your tear-dimmed eyes but see
And your stricken hearts but feel
All the wealth of joy that's mine,
You'd mourn no more for me.
I know that you are lonely, while
The dead are not forgot,
But the living need your smile,
Repining blesses not.

You have loving children left
To bless declining years;
Your life is not all bereft.
Look up through falling tears,
We shall meet beyond the river
Whose shores are clad in living green,
Where the sunbeams ceaseless quiver
Upon its waves of crystal sheen.

The Evening Star, August 19, 1907, p. 16 Accident Was Fatal Passenger From Chesapeake Beach Loses His Life Several hundred excursionists who were returning from Chesapeake Beach on the 6:30 o'clock train last evening were disturbed by a fatal accident near Lyons creek, between Chesapeake Beach and the Patuxent river, the victim being Ellis Jones, thirty-six years of age, who resided at 403 12th street southeast. It is reported that he was one of many excursionists who were unable to get seats in the crowded train and went to the platform of the car. He had hold of the side iron and was swinging from it when his head struck against a switch lamp, fracturing his skull. He fell from the rain. Robert E. Sanford, who had gone to the resort Saturday with Jones, pulled the bell cord, which caused the engine driver to stop the locomotive. The train was backed to the scene of the accident and many of the passengers viewed the body. Women and children became excited. After a short delay the train moved toward the city, leaving the body at the nearest station in order that an inquest might be held. Jones was a steamfitter and had been employed at the new Union Station. He went to the Beach with his friend Sanford of Ballston, Va., Saturday, and was returning home when the accident occurred. Suddenly Disappears It is stated that a number of other passengers were riding on the platform with Jones and some of them saw him swinging out from the side of the car. Suddenly he disappeared. When the train backed to where the body was lying it was found that the top of the switch lamp had been broken and thrown several yards from the switch. The skull of the steamfitter had been crushed and there was nothing that could be done for him. Residents of the county near Lyons creek looked after the body until William F. Owens, justice of the peace, could be summoned from Bristol. He held an inquest last night and a verdict of accidental death was rendered. An undertaker prepared the body for burial and brought it to this city this morning. Mrs. Jones and four children survive the deceased. His mother and sister, the latter Mrs. Laura E. Littleford, reside at 1212 E street southeast. Clayton Denver, a nephew of the deceased, was on the train at the time of the accident.

The funeral will be held from the family home tomorrow. Members of Local Assembly, No. 10, American Federation of Labor, of which the deceased was a member, will have charge of the funeral. The interment will be in Congressional cemetery.

Why feel so sad, why shed a tear,
Even though He has taken from us one so dear?
Cut down like a flower, cut down to die,
Your beautiful temple to occupy.

Jesus Himself has the messenger sent,
That for a season our hearts might in anguish be rent.
We are sad, oh, so sad, she has gone, but then--
Oh, how happy we'll be when we meet again.

The National Intelligencer, January 14, 1801

Died, on Monday, in this city, in his 32d year, James Jones, of Georgia, a member of the House of Representatives of the United States. His loss is great to his family and friends, but greater to his country. Few men possessed so great influence and respect in the state where he lived, and he was among the most respectable in the House of Representatives. His uniform and steady devotion to the principles of our republican constitutions was recommended by such an affability of manners, and disposition to friendship, that he seemed almost to escape the asperity of political party. When the melancholy tidings of his death were announced in Congress, the tear of grief on all sides of the house showed that political animosity was overcome by feelings more honorable to humanity; each one seemed to be sensible that the house had lost an ornament and a friend.

On his death being announced to the House of Representatives, they immediately resolved, by unanimous vote, that each member would wear, for one month, a crape round his left arm.

And this morning his funeral was attended by both houses of Congress.

The body of the Honorable James Jones of Georgia rests in Congressional Cemetery. There was a James Jones in Georgia who was a prominent civil patriot, but it has not been possible to make identification. Representative Jones may have been this Georgia state assemblyman, but some facts of residence seem to indicate that he was not.

James Henry Jones Dies of Pneumonia

Dean of Association of Oldest Inhabitants

Had Reached Ninety-Eighth Year

Funeral Services to Be Held Monday Afternoon at

Chapel of Congressional Cemetery

James Henry Jones, dean of the Association of Oldest Inhabitants, having been in his ninety-eighth year, died a little after 1 o'clock yesterday at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. William Lacey, at Seat Pleasant, Md. Mr. Jones had been an invalid for several years, but had not been in especially bad health until Tuesday, when he experienced difficulty in his breathing, and was forced to take to his bed. Death was due to pneumonia.

Funeral services are to be held Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the chapel of Congressional cemetery, under auspices of Harmony Lodge, No. 9, I.O.O.F., of which the deceased at the time of his death was one of the oldest members. Interment will be in Congressional cemetery. The Association of Oldest Inhabitants will participate in the services.

Born in Montgomery County

Mr. Jones was born at Middlebrook, Montgomery county, Md., August 9, 1818. He was the son of James Edmonston Jones and Mildred Coleman Degge, both of Virginia. He was one year old when his mother died, and but six years old when he lost his father.

In 1825 his guardian, Jesse Leach, put him to work with John Barrett to learn the tailor's trade, and he remained with Mr. Barrett for two years. In 1827 he was sent to John Dickson's painting shop in Georgetown, and while with him he went at intervals to the Lancaster School, where Robert Old was the teacher.

Learned Painting Trade

When he was taken from school he was placed in Mr. Dickson's shop to learn the trade of painting, and worked there until 1837, when Mr. Dickson retired from business. Young Jones then went to Columbus, Ohio, where he remained until 1842, when he returned to Washington and opened a grocery store at the corner of 8th and M streets northwest. He afterward opened a notion store at the corner of 8th and L streets southeast, and subsequently formed a partnership with John Riggs in the house painting business.

During the civil war Mr. Jones was a master painter at the Washington navy yard. He retired from active business in 1884.

Carried Torch for Fire Company

When fourteen years old, Mr. Jones' friends say, he carried the torch for the old Vigilant fire company of Georgetown, and was present at the fire at the Treasury Department in 1833, and at the Post Office Department fire in 1835. He was present at the opening of the old Baltimore and Ohio depot, September 12, 1836, as a member of the militia.

It was one of Mr. Jones' boasts that he helped haul the corner stone of the Washington Monument to its resting place. He became a member of the Association of the Oldest Inhabitants in 1865 when that organization was in its infancy.

Was Twice Married

For the last several years he had been unable to attend any of its meetings, but a silent tribute was always paid him by the members of the association on his birthdays, as the years passed, and it was hoped that he would live to attain the age attained by but one member of the association, W.M. Starr, who lived to be an hundred years old.

Mr. Jones was twice married, his first wife being Miss Eliza P. Adams, who died in 1858. He next married Miss Martha C. Thomas, who died in 1890. Mrs. Lacey is his only living child. Twelve grandchildren and two great-grandchildren survive him.

 O wake not his sweet spirit to suffer again.
 He slumbers so soundly; O let him sleep on --
 His sickness is ended and troubles all gone.
 O think how he suffered and moaned with pain,
 In the long night hours I soothed him in vain.
 Till God in His mercy sent down from above
 An angel that whispered a message of love.

Dies of Asphyxiation

Peculiar Circumstances Which Lead to Fatal Result

When John T. Jones, 50 years old, and employed by the Washington Gas Company as a watchman, was found dead in his watch box, at the corner of 5th and Washington streets, yesterday, it was supposed he had died from some organic trouble, such as heart disease, but an autopsy this morning developed the fact that he was accidentally strangled or choked to death as a result of a Thanksgiving indiscretion. Deputy Coroner L.W. Glazebrook performed the autopsy at the Emergency Hospital, and at its conclusion stated that Jones had unquestionably been drinking heavily throughout all of Thanksgiving day. He had evidently become sick after returning to his post of duty and vomited. Being in a semi-conscious condition from liquor he breathed the discharge back into his larynx and lungs, and died from resulting asphyxia. There being no question as to the cause of death, it was decided by the authorities that an inquest was unnecessary, and none will be held.

Jones was discovered in an unconscious condition in his watch box at the street intersection stated by Howard J. Diffenbaugh, who informed the police. The man was removed at once to the Emergency Hospital, where all efforts looking toward resuscitation were fruitless. He had been in the employ of the gas company for a number of years, and was engaged at the time of his death in watching over the exposed property of the company along the line of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home railroad, the introduction of the underground electric system necessitating a change in the line of pipes. He had a small watch box, in which was a coke-burning stove.

Jones was last seen alive by a colored man named Emanuel Davis, who passed him about 2:30 o'clock and spoke. Jones seemed drowsy at that time, and was leaning forward. The deceased lived at 725 11th street northwest, and leaves a widow.

Sudden Death of Mr. J.W. Jones, Stationery Clerk of the Senate

Those who saw the above-named gentleman in the apparent enjoyment of excellent health yesterday morning, will be greatly surprised to hear of his sudden death at 12 o'clock last night. At 12:30 p.m.

yesterday, the deceased was making preparations to leave the city on a short visit to Philadelphia. Calling upon Major McDonald, chief clerk of the Senate, to say "good bye," conversation turned on the studies of his little son, of whose proficiency Mr. Jones was very proud. Major McDonald asked the boy questions about his studies, and soon after, while the boy was reciting some poetry, the father began to tremble, and appeared to be falling. Major McDonald and Mr. Draper saw it and caught him. On being asked if he felt sick, Mr. Jones replied "No," that he had tripped against the chair. He was removed to a lounge, and almost immediately became insensible, the only external evidence of life being heavy breathing--so loud as to be heard in all parts of the Senate wing of the Capitol, where he died about midnight. The deceased was a native of Ohio, and was about fifty-five years of age. He was always an active politician--first as a whig, and then as a republican. About 1862 he came to this city, and accepted a position under Col. Forney, then secretary of the Senate, and for many years has held the position of chief clerk in the stationery room. He was a good officer, and had a large circle of acquaintances and friends in this city, who are deeply grieved at his sudden taking off.

Body of Missing Boy Is Found In The River

Companion of John Warren Jones Gives Tip Leading to Recovery

Search instituted Saturday night for John Warren Jones eight years old, who disappeared from his home, 813 G street southwest, about 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon, ended this morning about 8:15 o'clock, when his body was found in the river at the foot of 8th street southwest.

Yesterday morning the police were told that the missing boy was last seen on the oyster wharf, at the foot of 11th street. The crew of the police boat dragged near the spot. While it was at work a cousin of the missing boy declared he had seen the latter at a moving picture theater on 7th street Saturday night.

So positive was the cousin that he had seen Jones that the police abandoned their search at the oyster wharf. Last night, Wilbur Miller, a companion, of Jones, who resides near 6th and K streets southwest, told the police that he was with Jones on the wharf at the foot of 8th street Saturday afternoon.

Statement of Miller

"I saw him go out on the wharf," Miller stated, "and when he didn't come back I went home."

The boy probably was too badly frightened to say anything about the disappearance. This morning the crew of the police boat went to the 8th street wharf, John Gross, one of the crew, dropped the grappling hooks at the point designated by Miller as the place where he had last seen Jones, and his first effort to recover the body proved successful.

The body was taken to the morgue Coroner Nevitt made an investigation and gave a certificate of accidental death. An undertaker later took the body from the morgue and prepared it for burial. John W. Jones, father of the boy, died several years ago.

The Washington Times, August 23, 1905
Death of One of City's Oldest Inhabitants

Mrs. Lucippia A. Jones died this morning at her residence, 409 B street southeast.

Mrs. Jones was the youngest daughter of the late Henry Teitjen (Teachem) and Susanna Carter, and the sole survivor of that family. She was born in 1819 and, consequently, was one of the oldest native residents of Washington.

Her early childhood was spent in the old family residence, corner of Third and M streets southeast, that section at that time being peopled by families whose names have been so much associated with the upbuilding of the city.

She became the wife of William T. Jones in 1845 and four children were born to them, one of whom only is living, Edwin D. Jones with whom Mrs. Jones spent the last years of her life, her husband, having died in 1883.

Funeral of Mrs. Jones

Services to Be Held Today From Late Residence

Funeral services over the remains of Mrs. Lucippia Ann Jones were held today at her late residence, 409 B street southeast. Mrs. Jones, who was one of this city's oldest residents, died last Tuesday morning. She had been living with her son, Edwin D. Jones, for a number of years.

Mrs. Jones' father was the late Henry Teitjin, who came here from Bremen, Germany, in 1795, and established a sugar refinery on the corner of New Jersey avenue and N street. This was the first and only sugar refinery ever established in this section of the country. Shortly afterward he met the beautiful Miss Susanne Carter, an acknowledged belle. As Miss Carter was a member of one of the most prominent families in the south and Mr. Teitjin but a modest well-to-do German, there were great difficulties to the courtship which he began, but Miss Carter became Mrs. Teitjin in 1798. Mr. Teitjin enlisted in the war of 1812, and Mrs. Teitjin's brother, Capt. John Carter, also made a name for himself at that time. Mr. and Mrs. Teitjin had eight children, of whom Mrs. Jones was the youngest and at her death the sole survivor.

Mrs. Jones married William T. Jones in 1845. She was a southern lady of the old school. Besides her son, she leaves a number of grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

Old Pressman Dies

"Dick" Jones, Oldest of Craft in District

Richard L. Jones, who is said to be the oldest printing pressman in the District in length of service, died yesterday at the George Washington University Hospital. He was sixty-one years of age and had been connected with many newspapers in this city. He was seized with a sudden attack of heart disease Friday night and his friends hurried him to the hospital, where he passed away the following morning.

"Dick" Jones as he was familiarly called, was an employe of the pressroom of the government printing office at the time of his demise. He had many friends in this city, and his funeral will be in charge of the Pressmen's Union.

Rev. Father M. O'Donoghue, assistant pastor of S. Paul's Catholic Church, conducted the services. The pallbearers were chosen from the local pressmen's union, of which the deceased was a member, and were as follows: Messrs. John Callahan, George Kramer, Victor Haugarde, M.D. Fenton, J.J. McCarthy and G.A. Forden. The interment was in Congressional cemetery.

Jones, Maj. Gen. Roger	d. 15 Jul 1852		R57/253

The National Intelligencer, Saturday, July 17, 1852

On Thursday evening last Death very suddenly removed from this community, and from a very large family circle, almost respectable and esteemed gentleman and a gallant and distinguished veteran of the Army. General Roger Jones, for so many years Adjutant General of the Army, died, at his residence in this city, after a very short illness, the evening before last. General Jones was in the 64th year of his age. He was a native of Virginia, and the elder brother of the gallant and respected Commodore Catesby Jones, of the Navy. We never knew a more honorable gentleman, or one more estimable in all the domestic and social relations. His professional services and merits are familiar to the whole country. The eloquent "general orders," inserted in another column, of the General-in-Chief, his old brother in arms, do justice both to the personal and professional virtues of the deceased.

The National Intelligencer, July 17, 1852

General Orders, No. 28

Headquarters of the Army

Adjutant General's Office

Washington, July 16, 1852

The painful task devolves on the General-in-Chief of announcing to the Army the death of Colonel and Brevet Major General Roger Jones, Adjutant General, who expired in this city about sunset yesterday, after an illness of a few hours.

General Jones commenced his military career January 26, 1809, as a Lieutenant of Marines, which commission he held at the outbreak of the war of 1812 with Great Britain, when he was appointed a Captain of Artillery in the Army. To those who were the companions in arms of the deceased, his services during the war are too well known to require special enumeration. His zeal and activity in the arduous campaigns of 1813 and 1814 on the Niagara frontier, and his distinguished gallantry as a Major of the Staff in the memorable conflicts of Chippewa, Lundy's Lane, and the sortie of Fort Erie, won for him the universal respect and admiration of his brother officers, and the marked approbation of the Government. Raised in 1825 to the confidential post of Adjutant General, held by him at his decease, the Army at large will understand it as no slight praise to say that he brought to the discharge of its highly difficult and responsible duties an intelligence, honesty of purpose, and untiring devotion, which carried him through every emergency with credit to himself and advantage to the public service. In all the relations of private life he was equally admirable. No man's integrity was more spotless. He was most amiable and sincere; courteous in intercourse, staunch in friendship, liberal in charity. Though poor himself, the poor knew in him their benefactor.

As appropriate honors to the memory of the deceased, each military post will fire minute guns, (thirteen,) commencing at meridian, and display the national flag at half staff from the same hour till sunset on the day next after the receipt of this order; and the Officers of the Army will wear the prescribed badge of mourning for thirty days.

By order of Major General Scott;
L. Thomas,
Assistant Adjutant General

For details of the funeral and procession see "Pomp & Circumstance at Congressional Cemetery."

The National Intelligencer, July 19, 1852

Funeral of Adjutant General Jones

This solemn ceremony took place on Saturday afternoon last, according to the published program. Large numbers of persons assembled at and near the residence of the deceased to witness the performance of the last sad rites. The funeral service, which was that of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was conducted by the Rev. Dr. Butler, who accompanied it with an address in part allusive to the life, character, and services of the distinguished deceased. After the conclusion of this service, the procession was organized under the immediate directions of Col. Hickey, of the District militia, and marched to the Congress Burial Ground to the strains of martial music befitting the mournful occasion. The Boone Rifle Company formed the van of the procession; with the German Yagers, National Greys, and Washington Light infantry, succeeding.. Then came the body in a coffin, enhearsed, and itself folded by the flag that the late gallant General had so well, and long, and faithfully defended and served in the actual shock of battle, as well as in the ordinary routine of official duty, for a period of more than forty years. The hearse was followed by a train of carriages occupied by the Clergy, heads of Army and Navy Bureaus, members of the family of the deceased, Mayor of the city, the General-in-Chief of the Army, President of the United States (Fillmore), and members of the Cabinet, with friends and acquaintances. The body was committed to its temporary resting place, in a vault in the Congress burial ground, with the customary honors. It was fortunate that the heavy rain which prevailed in the morning cleared up before the hour for the funeral arrived.

Thomas L. Jones Dead At Home In This City

Prominent in Musical Circles of Washington and Member of Masonic Fraternity

Thomas L. Jones, prominent in musical circles died at his home, 122 13th street southeast at an early hour this morning after an illness of nearly three months.

Funeral services will be held Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the residence. Rev. Paul R. Hickok, pastor of the Metropolitan Presbyterian Church, of which Mr. Jones was a member; Rev. W.I. McKenney, pastor of Wesley Chapel, and Rev. Charles F. Steck, pastor of Epiphany Lutheran Church, whose congregations Mr. Jones had often served as vocalist, will participate in the services. Interment will be in Congressional cemetery. Pallbearers will be selected from among his friends in Masonic organizations.

Native of Indiana

Mr. Jones was born in Rockport, Ind., February 28, 1868 and was engaged in newspaper work in his native state before coming to Washington about fifteen years ago and entering the government printing office in the capacity of a proofreader. He was a member of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, and was active in union printing circles.

He was a member of Wesley Quartet and the Knights of Momus Quartet. Members of the former organization will at the home services sing a special arrangement of "Nearer, My God, To Thee," and at the grave members of the Momus Quartet will sing "Abide With Me," a hymn of which Mr. Jones was particularly fond.

Mr. Jones was a member of National Lodge, No. 12, F.A.A.M., and of Columbia Chapter, R.A.M. He had also been prominently identified with the Indian Society since its organization. He was president of the society last year, and at the time of his death was financial secretary.

Widow Survives Him

Mr. Jones was married about twelve years ago to Miss Emma L. Bishop, who, with his brother, F.G. Jones, survives him. Mr. Jones was taken ill about eleven weeks ago, and went to Terre Alta, W. Va., in the hope of benefiting his health. Mrs. Jones accompanied him, but was also taken ill, and about two weeks ago her condition was such that she had to be brought to Washington. Mr. Jones also returning. Although suffering from shock, Mrs. Jones is reported as somewhat improved in health.

Jones. On Saturday morning last, Dr. Thomas P. Jones of this city, formerly Superintendent of the Patent Office and Editor of the Franklin Journal of Philadelphia, aged 75 years. His funeral will take place from his late residence on F Street. This day at 4 o'clock p.m. The friends of the family are invited to attend.

The decease of this gentleman has been made known through the public prints but no extended notice of his life and labors has yet appeared. We hope to see one from a pen capable of doing him full justice, while, in the mean time, our own shall record some of the principal events in his life. His labors and exertions in various official duties and public trusts, extending through nearly forty years, call for a suitable acknowledgment from his survivors and many friends. He has long ranked high as a man of general science, and the world is indebted to him for two of the best treatises on Chemistry and Mechanical Philosophy which have appeared. At so early period he was appointed Professor of Chemistry and Natural Philosophy in William and Mary College, Virginia, afterwards in the Columbian College, District of Columbia, then of the Franklin Institute, Philadelphia. Here he commenced the publication of the Journal of the Institute, first at his own expense, and through this work, which he continued to edit for twenty-eight years until his death, he was enabled to do much for the advancement of science and the arts in the country. His connection with the United States Patent Office over which he was appointed Superintendent by President John Quincy Adams, brought him at once into acquaintance with the leading mechanics and artisans of the country, and contributed not a little to diffuse a more general and accurate scientific knowledge among them. It also brought into requisition his accurate knowledge of the history and the details of the patented inventions of other countries to which reference would be important before pronouncing upon the novelty and validity of American Inventions. He was so well informed on these subjects that, with his strength of memory, when a supposed improvement was laid before him he could refer to the work and to the very page where the same thing had been described and claimed long before. In this way he could often save the applicants all further trouble and expense. His written specifications of patents, and his monthly commentaries upon those which had been issued, as recorded in the Franklin Journal for many years, are remarkably clear and discriminating, conveying to the reader at once an accurate and comprehensive idea of each particular subject; and while they are eminently simple and practiced, the deductions and applications of theoretical science are frequently brought in to illustrate or enforce his statements. These were far from being always favorable to the inventors. Were they collected together into one volume, covering as they do the whole field of mechanical science, they would form a most valuable work for practical reference to show what had already been done by American inventors.

For the last fifteen years, though again connected with the Patent Office as Examiner of Patents, and afterwards selected as one of the commissioners to investigate into the cause of the explosion of steam boilers, (both Government appointments) his principal employment was that of attorney of procuring patents. In this capacity he renewed his former usefulness and met with abundant success, his knowledge of the patent laws of other countries in which patents were sought through him, as well as of the decisions of our own courts, enabling him, as well as of the decisions of our own courts, enabling him to act with the greatest readiness and certainty. His opinions were often sought in courts of law involving patent claims, and in appeals from the decisions of the office.

In fact, his familiarity with mechanical matters had become such as to place him by common consent the general arbiter of mechanical disputants. His acquaintance with the most distinguished men of science both abroad and at home was extensive, and their high opinion of him is attested by his election as honorary member of various learned institutions with which they were connected.

In 1841 his restoration to the Patent Office was urged by testimonials from all parts of the country, emanating from sources calculated to give them great weight.

Of his private life much could be said. He passed through the world always possessing a happy cheerful disposition, generous, humane, simple and unassuming, unreserved and communicative even when overwhelmed with business, and never uncourteous or impetuous. These are expressions which have not often a true applications, but those who knew Dr. Jones will attest to their absolute truth. Of his religious character we could also speak in the highest praise; but on this point any further remarks would be more appropriately reserved for an expressly religious journal. His sickness was short, and unattended by suffering; and during his last few days his mind, as is often the case, was at times clearer than it had been for years, and he said many things which made all around him happy. He was conscious to the last . A.

General Walter Jones was a descendant of Captain Roger Jones, who came from England with Lord Culpepper in 1680. He was born at "Mayfield", Northumberland County, Va.; his father was Dr. Walter Jones, an Edinburgh-trained physician of prominence, who was a delegate to the State Constitutional Convention of 1788 and a Congressman from Virginia in 1797-1799 and 1803-1811. He received a classical education from a Scotch tutor; read law in Richmond under Bushrod Washington; was admitted to the Virginia Bar in May 1796, before he was of legal age. He practiced in Fairfax and Loudoun Counties, Va. In 1802 he was appointed by President Jefferson as U.S. Attorney for the District of the Potomac, and in 1804, for the District of Columbia.

In 1808 he married Ann Lucinda Lee, who was a daughter of Charles Lee (1758-1815), Attorney General under Washington and Adams, by his first wife, Anne, daughter of Richard Henry Lee, the Signer. After marriage, he made his home in Washington. He had a family of three sons and eleven daughters.

In 1821 he resigned his Federal Attorneyship, but continued to practice law with success before the U.S. Supreme Court and in the courts of Maryland and Virginia. In the case of McCulloch Vs. Maryland (4 Wheaton, 316), 1819, he was associated with Luther Martin and Joseph Hopkinson on behalf of Maryland, in opposition to William Pinkney, Daniel Webster and William Wirt, representing the Bank of the United States. In other cases he was at times associated with Daniel Webster, Francis Scott Key and Henry Clay. Rufus Choate spoke of his "silver voice and infinite analytical ingenuity and resources".

He took part in the Battle of Bladensburg in 1814. In 1821 he was commissioned by President Monroe as Brigadier General of Militia of the District of Columbia, and at the time of his death was Major General of the Militia of the D.C. In 1835 he supervised the quelling of mob incendiarism and riot in Washington (See Daily National Intelligencer of August 13, 1835 and Daily Globe of August 14, 1835).

Late in 1816 he was associated with Rev. Robert Finlay, John Randolph, Bushrod Washington, Henry Clay and others in founding the "American Colonization Society", "for the purpose of colonizing the free people of color in the United States of America, in Africa, or elsewhere", for which the Committee requested the support of Congress. He was also a member of the Washington Monument Society.

He was described as small of stature and eccentric in dress.

Newspaper comment: "He speaks slowly and in a low tone, but with great purity of diction and clearness of thought." "A rival of Pinkney, Wirt and Webster, but excelled them all in depth and variety of learning." "He is universally respected, and by those who know him, warmly beloved." "Possessed of rare conversational powers and personal charm; generous and sympathetic to a fault."

Although a Virginian, he was devoted to the Union, and held secession in Virginia as a double treason, both to the United States and to the Commonwealth of Virginia.

Jones, Walter (Jr.)

d. 4 Apr 1829

18 yrs.

R33/64

The National Intelligencer, April 7, 1829

On the 4th instant, in the 19th year of his age, after a long and painful illness, Walter Jones, Jr., eldest son of Gen. Walter Jones.

This interesting young man had but a few months since joined the University of Virginia for the purpose of completing his collegiate studies -- full of hope and promise. But, after administering to some of his companions, who have fallen victims to the malignant fever that raged there, he returned in February last to his home, to remain until he could in safety renew his studies at College. Alas! a wise and inscrutable Providence otherwise ordered, and will in mercy pardon the griefs that rebel not, while they overwhelm sad prostrate the soul, under His dread decree.

In a few days after this most amiable and promising youth had reached his parents and friends the fatal disease appeared, but for a short time of an equivocal type; till at length all the virulent, complicated, and anomalous symptoms of the epidemic, in its most aggravated form, were developed, and finally baffled the approved skill and indefatigable attentions of our most eminent physicians.

An early and attached friend and associate, with all due deference to the censure generally death to the common places of obituary eulogy, cannot forbear, on this mournful occasion, to allow some indulgence to the feelings of affection and respect, which have grown up in the habits of sympathy and long connections, and are sanctioned by the justest estimate of a lamented friend and companion; and it may be encouraging to ingenuous and aspiring youth to know that, when our Heavenly Father calls to the high enjoyments and pursuits of immortal life souls endured with faculties to prosper and shine in the paths of mortal life, before their talents and virtues have emerged from the shades of Academic retreat and preparation to essay their earthly career of glory or of usefulness, they will not descend to the tomb without some memorial of their worth and honor, even here.

Young Jones possessed a genius, to whose future achievements of knowledge no limits can now be assigned, but what the law of our nature has prescribed to the human intellect, modified, as it must be, by the sphere and the intensity of its exertion. But his generosity and candor of soul, his warmth and simplicity of heart, his ardor and sincerity of affection, his reverential piety, and his high-toned truth and honor, can be adequately known to them alone in whose hearts, alas! his loss has left so wide a void.

The tenor of his conduct and sentiments, during his late and only serious illness, has raised, to a degree of enthusiasm, the tender and cherished recollections of the excellent qualities he had displayed in the exuberance of youth and health.

The sacred recesses of domestic sorrow are not to be intruded on: but we are permitted to allude to a most interesting conversation which he held with his father, in one of the few intermissions of his cruel disease, and in which, with a tenderness of feeling, a delicacy and elevation of sentiment, a firmness of purpose, and an enlightened scope of observation and forethought, above his years, and worthy of one qualified to become a hero or a sage of this world, and a blessed spirit of the next, he adverted to the too probable termination of his disorder; and, among other subjects, discussed the propriety and moral effect of the customary mourning habiliments worn by surviving relatives, and intimated his wish to have them dispensed with by his family.

Fatal Dose of Acid

Walter Jones, A Drummer, Commits Suicide

Declared He Had Been Robbed of His Employer's Money --

Coroner Gives Certificate

Walter Jones, fifty-eight years old, who was employed as a drummer for a wholesale tobacconist in this city, and lived at 105 2d street northeast, committed suicide this morning by taking a small quantity of carbolic acid. He had frequently said he would take his life, but his threat was never taken seriously, the matter being finally looked upon as a joke by his wife and children. It was stated at his home today that the deed was the result of his continued use of intoxicants.

He returned home under the influence of liquor yesterday and told members of his family that he had been robbed of $54 in money not his own, and said he could not face his employer again. His wife told him it was nonsense for him to talk that way, and said she would make good the amount. The much disturbed man said he felt the hand of a man in his pocket and knew he was taking the money, but he did not have the strength to stop him. Between 5 and 6 o'clock in the evening he went to a drug store and purchased five cents' worth of carbolic acid.

"I want to use it as a wash," he told the clerk in the store. "It's all right," he added "as I have been in the habit of using it."

Jones, it is believed, intended to take the acid last night, but fell asleep and probably forgot about it until this morning, when he was awakened in time for breakfast. After getting up he repeated the remark he had made about being unable to face his employer, showing that the loss of the money worried him. Addressing his son Walter, who is employed in the navy yard, he said: "Walter, you had better stay home this morning, as your mother will need you."

Swallows the Poison

The boy thought his father was joking, and laughed, but the request for him to stay at home was repeated. The boy had not gone to work when his father took the fatal dose, for it was then only about 7:30 o'clock. Walking toward the door the depressed man swallowed the poison and then returned to the dining room, where his wife and two sons were eating breakfast.

"It will all be over in a few minutes," he remarked, throwing the empty bottle on the table. Then he lay down on the sofa.

"I believe father has taken the stuff," said the son, when he detected the odor of carbolic acid on his father's breath.

When it was realized that the husband and father was in a serious condition, physicians were sent for and a policeman summoned. The physicians, it is stated, thought he might recover, and the members of the family hoped for the best until he became unconscious. Jones refused to allow the doctors to treat him, and asked that he be permitted to die at home. He was hurried to the Casualty Hospital, however, but his condition was such that the physicians there declared there was no hope, and death claimed him about 10 o'clock.

Native of Maryland

The deceased was a native of Maryland, having been born near Croome, in Prince George's county. He came to this city many years ago and has worked as a drummer for several tobacco firms. Coroner Nevitt investigated the case and gave the necessary death certificate. The body was removed this afternoon from the hospital. His funeral will probably take place tomorrow or Thursday. The pastor of Christ Church, navy yard, will officiate. The interment will be in Congressional cemetery.

But Curtis doesn't know that little "Bill," the neighborhood pet, will never wake up from his sleep. Curtis was the only eyewitness to the tragedy which engulfed the Jones home late yesterday, when an automatic pistol, discharging, sent a bullet through little Bill's head. It frightened Curtis at the time, but he quieted down after he found out that they were only taking Bill to Children's Hospital to sleep for the night. And then, Curtis curled up in an arm-chair--for his mother was planning to move Monday and the house furniture is scattered around in confusion -- and went off to sleep. Sent Boys to Play Mrs. Garnet Jones, busy with the preparations for the moving, sent the youngsters upstairs to play.
