Page, George The Evening Star, March 11, 1852 Page's Steamboat Yard A visit last evening to the busy establishment of Capt. Page, at the foot of Seventh street, disclosed to us evidence of the very gratifying advancement towards the maturity of the plans and aims of this truly enterprising and public-spirited citizen. Finished, finishing, partly built, and just commenced is the story of	d. 6 Jan 1873		Page Vault

the four steamboats in and at Capt. Page's building yard and wharves. The pretty and fleet William Selden is lying at the wharf ready for a new service, to which, we learn \, she will be shortly put. The canny little spirits, the G.W.P. Custis, is very near completion; she bids fair to be a great favorite, and propelled, as she will be, by two powerful locomotive engines, one to each wheel, is supposed able to distance any thing of the moving kind in our waters. Her draught of water is only 19 inches. Next is the Union, a boat building with special references to the ferry business between Washington and Alexandria; she is to be able to accommodate farmers, marketers, travellers with horses, carriages, etc., as well as the ordinary passengers between the two cities. She will be ready for launching early in May. The Union has the decided advantage of not requiring to be turned each time her direction is changed. And lastly comes the boat for which the name of the Richard Bayler has been mentioned. She is building for a company formed along the Rappahannock river, and is intended for the trade between Baltimore and Fredericksburg. Her keel has been laid down two hundred feet with thirty feet breadth of beam. She will have capacity for four hundred tons of cargo, besides ample accommodations for passengers. Her draught of water, with a full cargo, will not exceed four feet.

Mr. Page intends running his ferry boat Union from his own wharf, at the foot of Seventh street, which is, in fact, more central than Eleventh. With this view he is newly fitting up the large storehouse for the temporary accommodation of passengers waiting for the boat, as well as for the general purposes of a respectable hotel, for which it is very well calculated.

We repeat that the enterprise, boldness, and spirit displayed by Mr. Page are admirable, meriting the cheerful acknowledgment and "God speed" of all our citizens. He has within a comparatively short space of time changed a dreary, deserted spot into a busy neighborhood, not only giving to numbers of worthy artisans profitable employment, but commencing a new branch of industry here that might, and we trust will, terminate in being permanent and important. Once more, we say, he serves, though he might not need, the friendly encouragement of this community.

Death of Capt. George Page, The Well-Known Inventor

Many of the residents of the District will regret to learn that Capt. George Page, formerly a resident of this city, died at the residence of his son, in Baltimore county, on Saturday last, in the 74th year of his age. Mr. Page was the founder of the well-known firm of George Page & Co., founders and machinists, in Baltimore, about forty years ago. He possessed great energy, and through his ingenuity produced many machines, which he lived to see put into practical operation, and which have added very materially to the wealth of the country; among them the morticing machine, turning machine, envelope machine, and the circular saw mill. The latter was his greatest achievement and to its development and success the energies of his later business life were almost exclusively devoted. For many years he resided in South Washington, and carried on a windmill, as also machine works and streamboat building. The Virginia, Wm Selden, Champion, George Page, and Union were built by him. At one time he represented the 7th ward of Washington in the city councils. His remains arrived here today, and were interred in the Congressional cemetery.

The Will of Mrs. Maria C. Page

It will be remembered that Mrs. Page in April last bequeathed a large property to the Universalist society in this city. Mr. C.H. Armes, as attorney for the heirs-at-law, filed a bill in equity, claiming all the property on the ground that the bequests are illegal, having been made less than one month before Mrs. Page's death. Gen. T.T. Crittenden, W. Martin and Riddle & Padgett, for the society, demurred to the bill. Yesterday the demurrer was argued in the Equity Court, and over ruled.

The Will of Maria C. Page

Today before Judge Olin, in the Probate Court, the will case of Mrs. Maria C. Page, to which a caveat was filed on Saturday by Mrs. Lockwood, was heard, Gen. Crittenden appeared for Mrs. Smith, the executrix named in the will and Mrs. Lockwood for the caveators. The court dismissed the caveat.

That Interesting Will Case, Editor, Star.

My connection with the "interesting will case" mentioned in your Saturday's issue was merely as amannensis; Mrs. Maria C. Page, and not Mrs. H.M. Smith, dictating from a former will, while Mrs. Page was yet in comparatively good health, her death occurring suddenly of pneumonia, several weeks after the will was changed, although it was witnessed and signed but a few weeks before her death. The arrangements for the reception of the child by St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum were made some time previous to her death, at which time I was requested to place her there, being at the bedside of Mrs. Page the last day of her life. It is due to Mrs. Helen M. Smith, a life-long friend of Mrs. Page, and who was absent from the city at the time, to state that she is a lady of independent means, and benefited in no way by the death of Mrs. Page. The Universalist Society of this city and the only son of the deceased are the beneficiaries.

Jane Z. Gilfillan.

The National Intelligencer, August 23, 1849

The friends of the late William Byrd Page, in their grief for his death, are soothed by the recollection of his virtues. He was the eldest son of William Byrd Page, of Fairfield, (Va.) a man whom his contemporaries justly regarded as the pattern of a Virginia gentleman of the old school. The same sincerity, uprightness, generosity, and urbanity which had characterized the father, were found also in the son. Mr. Page, the younger, was very early in life affected with deafness, which steadily increased, operating to impair greatly his usefulness to the community and to himself, while it unfitted him for that place in the social circle which his mind and manners eminently entitled him to occupy. But this affliction could not prevent his sterling merits and amiable demeanor from making their proper impression on all who knew him. Faithful in duty and an affectionate relation, he was ever prompt to perform any office of friendship or benevolence, at whatever inconvenience to himself. Truly indeed has a surviving friend remarked of him, that kinder heart than his never beat in a human breast.

Mr. Page was born in Frederick county, in Virginia, on the 14th of May, 1798, and died in this city on the 14th of August, 1849.

Fatal Accident

On Friday morning last, William Page, while at work on a scaffold inside the Smithsonian Building, fell from the same, and so dreadfully fractured his skull as to cause almost instant death. It seems the unfortunate man, who bears a good character, was warned of the dangerous position in which he stood. The deceased was interred yesterday by the society of Odd Fellows.

History of the Naval Lodge, No. 4, F.A.A.M.

Yelverton Peyton Page, Worshipful Master 1852 and 1856-1858, possessed one of the most interesting personalities in the history of the Lodge, and through a eulogy pronounced upon him by his intimate friend, Past Grand Master B.B. French, in 1863, we are permitted an insight into his life and character as fortunate as it is unusual. He was born in Washington, D.C., July 17, 1823, of parents noted for their integrity and worth and among the prominent citizens of the city. They were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as was also their son, and his early youth under the care of such parents promised to develop a character for goodness, truth and morality -- which promise was amply fulfilled. In early boyhood he was a page in the U.S. Senate, and became a favorite with many of the Senators. During the recess periods he devoted himself to study, and later became one of the most important clerks in the office of the Secretary of the Senate. He was initiated in Naval Lodge June 5, 1847; passed July 31, 1847, and raised August 2, 1847; exalted in Washington R.A. Chapter; made a Knight Templar May 11, 1853. Besides his service as Master he held various offices in Naval Lodge. In manner he was dignified, yet kind and courteous. As a Mason his charity was known throughout the jurisdiction; to him Freemasonry was not a mere shadow; it was a solemn and abiding obligation. In the Grand Lodge he stood high, and was bold and decided in the expression of opinions he considered right. He was elected Grand Master for the year 1863 while ill, and was installed in his home. In his address on that occasion he closed with the pathetic words: "You have summoned me in my weakness; you must sustain me by your strength." At this time he was apparently convalescing from an attack of pneumonia, and while he became better, he never regained his health, and died Sept. 26, 1863, while Grand Master of the District, and but forty years of age.
