Richardson, Leora M.	d. 12 Aug 1884	49 yrs.	R95/316
-----------------------------	----------------	---------	----------------

Submitted by: Bruce Richardson, Buffalo, Minnesota, great-grand nephew of Leora's husband James, August 28, 2004

Little is known of Leora, yet a modicum of information in the historical record survives for her husband, James C. Richardson, which helps shed a ray light, albeit a dim one, on Leora's life. James' birth father, Robert Little of New Jersey, died young and his mother, Catherine Perrine, subsequently remarried to Francis Richardson, whose surname James adopted.

James and Leora were married in Monroe, Green, Wisconsin on Christmas day in 1852. A daughter, Elmira, was born to them two years later in 1854. The 1860 Federal Census shows James as a "daquerian artist," which is a very early photographer. Records indicate that he continued that profession in Decorah, Iowa during the years of 1862-1869. Another daughter, Arloa, was born to them in 1866 while in Iowa.

The 1870 Federal Census, interestingly, shows the family now living in Prarie Du Chien, Wisconsin living next door to Leora's brother Ira Cady and family. James and Ira are employed in "Water Elevator Manufacturing." Come 1880, we find James and Leora and daughter Arloa some forty miles to the East now living in Boscobel, Wisconsin with the multi-talented James employed as a "mechanic." He is also a local officer in the Masonic Order and a Justice of the Peace.

A restless spirit brought James, Leora, and Arloa in June of 1883 to Washington D. C. where they resided at 215 4 ½ St. NW. Little more than a year later in August of 1884, Leora succumbed to uterine cancer and died at a too young age of 49. James, per the 1890 City Directory, reverted to his early trade of carpentry and daughter Arloa as a teacher. In 1891 James and Arloa removed to Tacoma, Washington where Arlora married Frank Harshberger, a lawyer and president of a mining company, while James resumed carpentry work.

Thus and so we know not enough about Leora M. Richardson, and can only imagine and surmise the joys and sorrows of her life that ended so prematurely in that summer of 1884. Her body lies in prestigious ground, and, pray tell, her soul resides in heaven above.

Fatal Accident

Another of those distressing accidents, resulting from the careless handling of firearms, took place yesterday, by which an estimable young man was instantly hurried to another world.

About 6 o'clock yesterday evening, Mr. Richardson, a printer—a nephew of Mr. William Carey Jones—went to the room of his friend, Albert Bargle, and to sport picked up a revolver, knife and single-barreled pistol, and flourishing them in the air advanced upon Mr. Bargle, reciting some mock heroic verses from one of the poets. He elevated the revolver in the direction of Mr. B. who attempted to get hold of it and in so doing the pistol was accidentally exploded, the ball taking effect in Richardson's stomach, and in less than half an hour he was a corpse.

These facts were stated before Justice Donn by Mr. M.C. Watkins, who as present at the time. The most perfect good feeling existed between the two young men, as was proven by the concurrent testimony of Mr. Watkins, Messrs. Charles P. Dimitry, and P.B. Foster.

The young men had made arrangements to lodge at Mr. Fill's, in order that they might be frequently together, and Mr. Richardson had that afternoon left his former residence to occupy a room at Mr. Fills.

Mr. Bargle appeared to be greatly distressed by the calamity and anxiously awaited an examination. He was waited on by Messrs. Ward and Sessford, of the Auxiliary Guard, and went with them to the central guard house, where the examination was held by Justice Donn, W. Lenox, Esq., appearing for Mr. Bargle. The statements of the gentlemen named, two of whom (Messrs. Watkins and Dimitry) were in the room at the time proved that the death was the result of accident and the Justice released Mr. Bargle on his own recognizance to appear at any future examination if one should be deemed necessary.

Richardson. In this city on the 23d inst., William A. Richardson, in the 43d year of his age.

Father!

I see no more that love-lit brow
 No more that beaming smile—
 That loved one's form, it moulders now,
 Far from a weeping child.
 Though long we mourn, yet still our hearts
 Melt, melt in loving tears;
 The husband, father, friend, has gone—
 Death in our hearts appears.

Cold love but call one moment back
 Of life's fast-fleeting breath,
 Or, warm the clay which moulders now
 In the cold arms of death.
 O then I'd use that power divine
 And wake the life again—
 Recall my father from the grave;
 But no! the wish is vain.

The dead when once on death's dark sea
 The soft gales waft them o'er,
 To you bright land, far, far away,
 Bright Canaan's happy shore.
 No more their spirits wander back,
 No more in sorrow roam
 But upward, upward wing their flight
 To dwell with Christ and home.

They're vain, the tears of sorrow now,
 And vain the deep-drawn sigh;
 He dwells with God's bright angels now,
 No more, no more to die.
 Where tears no more shall silent fall,
 Nor streams of sorrow pour,
 Where sick and sorrow, pain and death
 Are felt and feared no more.

Richardson, William Oscar d. 22 Feb 1882 12 yrs. 5 mos. 6 days R91/68

Richardson. Wednesday morning, February 22, 1882, William Oscar, oldest son of John H. and Victoria Richardson, aged 12 years 5 months and 6 days.

Thou hast left us! oh, how soon!
 Thy life had hardly reached its noon.
 Thy joys of life had just begun,
 When, lo! we see thy setting sun.

Thou hast left us, but above
 Loved ones will twine thy wreath of love.
 Removed from earth, from pain set free,
 Our loss has all been gain to thee.
