Death's cruel dart has pierced my heart
And bowed me down with grief;
And beneath the silent sod
My darling Jimmy sleeps.

Oh Jimmy, must I give you up--
You, whom I love so well?
How can I drink this bitter cup
And say a last farewell.

The flowers will bloom in summer;
In winter it will rain;
But the face of darling Jimmy
I will never see again.

Firemen Fined
Assistant Foreman and Private Declared Guilty of Dereliction
In the case of Assistant Foreman Frank Wagner of No. 3 engine company, recently found guilty of failing to respond with his company to a fire alarm, the chief engineer of the fire department has recommended to the District Commissioners that the man be fined $5, and warned that a repetition of the offense will result more seriously. Wagner claims that he was asleep at the time the gong summoning his company to the fire sounded, but was awakened by the noise made by the company in leaving quarters, whereupon he arose and hurried after it.

Record of Tragedy
Two Suicides and One Accidental Death in the List
Another May End Fatally
Mrs. Daisy Wagner Shoots Herself While on Public Road
Found Covered With Snow
Mrs. Georgianna Harley Employed Illuminating Gas in Agency of Death -- Fall to Pavement

Two suicides, an accidental and probably fatal case of poisoning and a death precipitated by a fall on the icy pavements constituted today's record of tragedy in the National capital. Both suicides and the sudden death were those of women, while the victim of gas, it is believed unintentionally, left flowing from a jet, was a young ironworker from Pennsylvania. Motive there must have been behind each of the cases of self-murder, but the tangled skeins of judgment-warping events have not yet been unraveled.

Probably the most inexplicable of the two suicides was that of Mrs. Daisy Wagner, wife of Howard G. Wagner, a local dealer in photographers' supplies.

Young, beautiful and apparently farthest removed from that condition of mind which would cause a woman, naturally retiring and modest, to plan death so that her remains might be left to the morbidly curious gaze of whosoever chanced to pass. Mrs. Wagner's body was found soon after dawn this morning at the public entrance to the Zoological Garden, at 18th and Irving streets. The storm king whose rule was undisputed last night, provided one of nature's winding sheets, a blanket of snow, and the body was frozen.

Revolver Agency of Death
A bullet hole behind one ear and a revolver clutched tightly in Mrs. Wagner's hand indicated the agency of death. An apparently well-authenticated rumor imputed a threat of self-destruction to the young woman's husband in case his wife committed suicide, and friends hurrying to his side immediately after the news of the finding of Mrs. Wagner's body, were just in time to prevent him from leaping through one of the fifth-story windows of an apartment house.

In the other case of suicide Mrs. Georgianna Harley, keeper of a boarding house at 813 9th street, bade her husband an affectionate farewell last evening. This morning she was found in bed in a dying condition, with gas flowing from a tube, one end of which was tightly wedged between her teeth.

Miss Johanna Sullivan, an employe in the government printing office, slipped and fell on the icy pavement at the corner of 1st and H street, and died soon afterward from an attack of heart disease, superinduced by the shock.

Thomas Rowe, who was employed as an iron worker in connection with the construction of the new Anacostia bridge, was found in his room overcome by gas which was escaping from a partly open jet. He is in the Emergency Hospital in a critical condition.

Body Covered With Snow
Cold in death and covered with snow, the body of Mrs. Daisy M. Wagner, wife of Howard G. Wagner, who conducted a photographic supply establishment at 10th and F streets until recently, was found in the roadway near 18th and Irving streets this morning about 7 o'clock. Clutched in her right hand was a revolver, a bullet wound in the head over the right ear making it apparent that the woman had committed suicide.

"I understand that her husband said he would commit suicide if he learned that his wife had killed herself," a friend of the photographer told the police shortly after the body was found, "and I hope you will find him before he has a chance to kill himself."

Mr. Wagner was located shortly thereafter, and when told of what his wife had done he made an effort to jump from a fifth story window of the Kenesaw apartment house, 16th and Irving streets, where he had gone to call on his friends, Mr. and Mrs. Gratz Charles Helm. Mr. Helm and Mr. Clinedinst caught him, however.

"I wish I were dead," Mr. Wagner moaned.

Coroner Issues Certificate
The body of Mrs. Wagner was removed to the tenth precinct police station, and later to an undertaking establishment, the police stopping at the residence of Coroner Nevitt long enough to permit that official to make an examination, hear the result of the police investigation and give a certificate showing that death resulted from a self-inflicted wound.

The death of Mrs. Wagner and the effort on the part of her husband to kill himself, were the climax to alleged unpleasant relations between the couple.

John J. Turner and W.B. Wilson, employes of the Zoo, were on their way to work this morning when their attention was attracted to an object in the roadway near the entrance to the part. There was so much snow over the object, however, that it was not until they approached very near that they realized it was the body of a woman. One of them stood guard while the other went to the Kenesaw and asked the elevator boy, Sinclair Thomas, to telephone to the police. Where the body was found was only about two squares from the apartment house, but Mr. and Mrs. Helm, who had been among the friends last to see Mrs. Wagner, were ignorant of what the young woman had done. The police took charge of the body and hurried it to the station. Inspector Boardman heard of the affair and sent Detective Evans to make an investigation, but before he reached the station Detective Greene of the tenth precinct had identified the remains.

Farewell to Child
Mrs. Wagner, whose maiden name was Nourse, was about twenty-five years of age, and was regarded by her friends as a beautiful woman. She was bright and cheery, and even yesterday after she concluded to take her life, she engaged in a conversation with friends and apparently was cheerful. Her mother resides at 1320 U street northwest, and as late as 2:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon she was there to see her mother and to say farewell to her three-year-old daughter Margaret.

"While she was at the house yesterday," the police were old, "she hugged and kissed the child a number of times, and it seemed a struggle on her part to be able to leave the little one."

Mrs. Wagner said nothing about suicide, however, but made arrangements for the child to join her and her husband at the Chapin apartment house this morning. Mrs. Wagner having engaged a suite of rooms yesterday and moved his belongings there. Husband and wife were at the Chapin yesterday, but the did not meet. Mrs. Wagner was there about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, with a suit case containing wearing apparel and toilet articles.

Interments in the Historic Congressional Cemetery
"I'll be back later," she told an employe.

Fails to Keep Appointment

Mr. Wagner reached the Chapin after 6 o'clock, and went to his new apartment. He had an engagement to meet his wife there at 7 o'clock, it was stated today, but she failed to keep the appointment. Mr. Wagner last night showed signs of uneasiness, and after 10 o'clock he went away in search of his wife. When he appeared at the Chapin early in the evening he had a box of candy for Mrs. Wagner. The box was left on a table in the apartment, and upon the wrapping was written: "waited until 6:45; will be back at 7:15."

At the time Mr. Wagner left his two big trunks had not been opened, but the suit case belonging to Mrs. Wagner was left open. It was thought she took the revolver from the suit case, but it was afterward found that she had procured it at the apartment of Mr. and Mrs. Helm. Early in the afternoon she called at the Kenesaw to see Mrs. Helm, but the latter was not at home. When she called after 5 o'clock, however, she found Mrs. Helm at home, and Mrs. Clinedinst, another friend, was with her.

Declines Dinner Invitation

Both Mrs. Helm and Mrs. Clinedinst knew of the troubles of Mrs. Wagner. Mr. and Mrs. Wagner had remained at the Helm apartment Wednesday night. They noticed, however, that Mrs. Wagner was greatly troubled and they invited her out to dinner.

"I can't go with you tonight," Mrs. Wagner replied, adding that she would have to go and look after her apartments.

Mrs. Helm did not suspect that her friend had taken a revolver from the former's apartment. It was about 5:45 o'clock when Mrs. Wagner said goodbye to Mrs. Helm and Mrs. Clinedinst, and left the Kenesaw.

It was stated that Mr. Wagner went in search of his wife last night when he left the Chapin apartment house, telephoning to several friends before he left. He spent the entire night searching for her.

Mrs. Wagner had a host of good friends, and her domestic relations were the happiest, it is stated, until a short while ago. Friends of Wagner say he was fond of the races and other sports, and that he went to New Orleans this winter to see the horses run. Upon his return from New Orleans, it is said, he made a trip to New York, returning only recently.

The absence of Wagner, it is believed, caused his wife a great amount of annoyance. Two nights ago, however, she seemed to be in a forgiving frame of mind, and it was thought she and her husband would live happily together.

It is believed that Mrs. Wagner went directly to the spot where she killed herself when she left her friends at the Kenesaw about 5:45 o'clock, and that she was dead before 6 o'clock.

The bullet passed entirely through the head, crushing the skull at the points of entrance and exit.

Mrs. Wagner was a niece of the late Col. William G. Moore. Her father died several years ago. It was stated this afternoon that arrangements for the funeral had not been made.

The Evening Star, January 25, 1908, p. 4

Death of Mrs. Wagner

Plans for Funeral Delayed, Husband in Baltimore

The funeral of Mrs. Howard G. Wagner, who committed suicide last Thursday night or yesterday morning at 18th and Irving streets, immediately in front of the Zoo entrance by shooting herself in the head, will, in all probability, take place Monday afternoon. Other than setting the day the family has made no arrangements, and nothing definite will be known regarding the funeral until this evening.

The body is at Speare's undertaking establishment, where it was removed from the tenth precinct station house yesterday. It is stated that the death of Mrs. Wagner proved so severe a shock that it has been necessary for friends to devote practically their entire time to the mother, the husband and little daughter, the two former being in such mental condition that the making of definite arrangements had to be postponed. The husband is constantly being watched by his brother and friends.

That the husband knew Mrs. Wagner contemplated suicide is said to be borne out by remarks he is alleged to have made when he summoned a number of friends last Thursday night and made search for his wife, which lasted until the early hours of yesterday morning. When Mr. Wagner became thoroughly convinced that something had happened to Mrs. Wagner Thursday evening he notified John W. Holliday, and employee of the Post Office Department, and the two men organized a searching party, the remaining members being Policeman Weber of the 10th precinct, A.E.T. Henson and J.G. Moore. The party searched until after 2 o'clock in the morning. Later they communicated with the police station and hospitals, and were about to renew the search when associates of the husband learned of the discovery of the body yesterday morning by a Zoo Park employe.

In State of Collapse
After being told of the finding of the body and prevented from jumping from a window in the Kenesaw apartment house, Wagner is said to have lapsed into a condition akin to coma. He later procured a bottle of strychnine, it is declared, which he attempted to place to his lips a number of times. His condition became such last night that his brother was summoned from Baltimore, and the latter, with several other men, is now with Wagner. He threatens to take his life, and a vigilant watch is regarded as absolutely necessary.

Mrs. Julia M. Nourse, mother of the deceased, who resides in the Ilkley apartment house, 1320 U street, is under the care of her son and daughter, Robert Nourse and Miss Ida Nourse. The small daughter of the Wagners is there. The child was placed in the care of her grandmother pending the moving of Wagner and his wife into the Chapin apartment house.

Owing to Wagner's condition it was decided by his brother and friends that for the time being it would be best to remove him from scenes which would remind him of his wife or her death, and he was taken to Baltimore.

The husband of the deceased, now in Baltimore, is under the care of a physician, and is being constantly expressed that he may not be able to attend the funeral.

Sisters' Burial To Be Held Today
Second Death Caused by Shock and Grief
Two sisters, who died Tuesday of heart attacks within an hour, the death of the second being attributed to grief and shock over the death of the first, will be buried together in Congressional Cemetery at 2 p.m. today.

Last rites for Mrs. Lillie M. Baird, 62, wife of William J. Baird, and Mrs. Laura V. Wagoner will be held at the graves with the Rev. H.C. Jope, pastor of the Ninth Street Christian Church, officiating.

Mrs. Baird died at her home, 1103 C street northeast, and a short time later Mrs. Wagoner, employed in a downtown office, was summoned to the C street home and died a short time afterward.

Both were natives of Washington, the daughters of the late Mr. and Mrs. James W. Plant.

Surviving Mrs. Baird are her husband, a son, Lester P. Baird, and two stepsons, Harvey and Murray Baird. Nearest kin of Mrs. Wagoner was Mrs. Baird.

Funeral of a Celestial
Moy Wah's Grave Filled with Incense and Choice Viands
The remains of Moy Wah, the Chinaman who died two days ago, were deposited in a grave scented with punk and half filled with choice Chinese edibles in Congressional Cemetery yesterday afternoon. Several hundred people gathered in the cemetery to witness the peculiar rites.

On the way from the undertaker's to the grave a brother of the deceased sat on the hearse and scattered perforated bits of paper along the street. At the cemetery a little group of celestials from Chinatown had assembled to meet the funeral party and assist in lowering the body into the grave.

Two roast chickens, cups of tea and wine, and two bowls, each containing rice and a hard boiled egg, were placed near the head of the grave. Bunches of punk and license were burned, and a large box, filled with articles which had belonged to the dead man, was burned over the grave.

Died on board Hartford, Donaldsville, La., August 10, 1862.

Dictionary of American Biography
(Jan. 5, 1817 - Aug. 10, 1862), naval officer, was born in Charleston, Mass., the son of Lieutenant Colonel Robert Dewar and Maria Montresor (Auchmuty) Wainwright, and a descendant of Richard Wainwright who was a planter in South Carolina in the early eighteenth century. His father (1781-1841), an officer of the United States Marine Corps, is noted for suppression of a mutiny in the Massachusetts state prison in 1824, an authentic record of which for many years formed one of the standard selections in school readers.

Wainwright entered the navy as a midshipman on May 11, 1831, and after some preliminary training in his profession at Norfolk made a cruise in the Mediterranean (1833-36). He prepared at the Norfolk naval school for his examination for the grade of passed midshipman, a rank to which he was promoted from June 15, 1837. After a period of service at the Washington navy yard he was ordered to duty with the United States Coast Survey. In September 1841 he was promoted lieutenant. From 1842 to 1845 he was with the Vincennes of the Home Squadron, and from 1846 to 1847 with the Columbia of the Brazil Squadron. In 1848 he returned to the Coast Survey, serving there until 1856, part of the time as commander of the J.Y. Mason. After a period of service with the Merrimack of the Pacific Squadron (1857-60), he was assigned to ordnance duty at the Washington navy yard, where he was stationed in 1861. He was promoted commander from Apr. 24 of that year. In October he commanded the sailors at Fort Ellsworth near Alexandria, and in November he conveyed a detachment of seamen to Cairo, Ill. On the last day of the year he was detached from the navy yard and ordered to command the Hartford, the flagship of Flag Officer D.G. Farragut [q.v.], preparing for service on the lower Mississippi. On Apr. 24, 1862, when the fleet passed Fort St. Philip and Jackson, the flagship was subjected to a galling fire from the forts and was set on fire by a fire raft, being with difficulty saved from the flames. On the following day, when it was steaming up the river, shots were exchanged with the batteries on shore. The flagship arrived off New Orleans much riddled, with a loss of thirteen men. Later when she passed and repassed the batteries at Vicksburg she gave a good account of herself. On July 15 below Vicksburg she engaged the enemy's ram Arkansas and suffered a loss of nine men. In all of the operations of the squadron Wainwright until the last days of July had a distinguished part. He then suffered an attack of remittent fever which proved fatal within two weeks. His death occurred on board his vessel at Donaldsville, La.

On Mar. 1, 1849, he was married to Sally Franklin Bache, a great-grand-daughter of Benjamin Franklin and a grand-daughter of Richard Bache and Alexander J. Dalls [q.q.v.]. Richard Wainwright [q.v.] was the eldest of his four surviving children.

Charles E. Walker, whose death occurred recently at his residence, 315 E street northwest, was one of the oldest and most highly esteemed citizens of this District. He was born in Maryland, December 15, 1818, but came to Washington in 1834. With his brother, Jonathan T. Walker, he was largely identified with the early business interests of the city. He built the Wesley Chapel and superintended the construction of Metropolitan Church, of which at the time of his death he was one of a few surviving charter members. A pioneer in Methodism he worked earnestly in the mission established by Wesley Chapel, which afterward developed into Fletcher, North Capitol and Waugh churches. He married twice, his first wife being a sister of Mr. S.T.G. Morsell, and his second the daughter of Rev. George Hildt of the Baltimore conference.

Of his thirteen children, nine survive. They are: Mrs. James H. McKenney, Mrs. A.B. Duvall, Mrs. Truman Lanham, Mrs. Lauren J. Taylor, Mrs. Charles Yeatman and three single daughters, Martha A., Juliet and Hattie Belle, and an only son, Frank H. Walker. Captain Samuel H. Walker, the famous Texan ranger and Mexican war hero, was a younger brother of the deceased.

The Evening Star, January 10, 1870
On the 8th January, Major James C. Walker, eldest son of Mrs. George Parker in the 39th year of his age. A shadow has suddenly fallen upon a home that with the bright New Year caught the glow of happy hours and still reechoes the kindly wishes of friends. A noble spirit has passed from these earthly scenes -- a name is left to be gilded with the shining light of many virtues! Intelligent and cultivated -- generous and charitable -- a faithful friend in prosperity and adversity -- firm -- brave and chivalric in the service of his country -- loving, gentle and true in the ties of kindred -- we fondly remember him praying that the ruthless hand of Death which smote him in his manly strength may have translated him beyond the stormy waves of life to the haven of Heavenly Peace. No eulogy or tribute (agreeing with the modesty of his character) seems more fit than the simple word -- Regret.

Former Superintendent of Police Had Active Part in Building City

Maj. S.H. Walker, 91, Dies Suddenly

Maj. Samuel H. Walker, 91, a former superintendent of Metropolitan Police, died suddenly in his office at 507 E street shortly after 8 o'clock this morning. Maj. Walker had left his home, 420 B street northeast, only a few minutes before.

One of the best known business men in Washington, Maj. Walker was born here June 7, 1844, and had an active part in building up the northeast and southeast sections of the city. He built the building which houses police headquarters.

At the time of his death he was president of the Capital City Life Insurance Co., which he founded years ago as the Capital City Benefit Society. It is the oldest industrial insurance company chartered in Washington. For many years he had been vice president of the National Capital Bank which he also helped to found.

Helped Defend City

Maj. Walker served in the defense of Washington. He was a member of the unenlisted forces that threw lines of defense around the city. He attended public schools here and was the oldest living graduate of Columbian College, now George Washington University. He was a member of Sigma Chi fraternity.
Maj. Walker was employed by the clerk's office at the old city hall January 2, 1862. Later he entered the real estate business.

Some 20 years later, in 1886, the Commissioners of the District tendered Mr. Walker the post of major and superintendent of police. Though he remained in office only six months, resigning to carry on his business affairs, Maj. Walker made a memorable record. He set up radical changes in the system of police protection. His orders of police inspection still stand, changed only in small degree.

Developed Several Companies
It was after resigning from the police force that Maj. Walker developed the Washington Title Insurance Co., the Mutual Fire Insurance Co., the National Capital Insurance Co., and several other organizations which are still in existence. He was vice president of the East Washington Savings Bank for many years.

An active Mason, the 33d degree was conferred upon Maj. Walker about 20 years ago. He was a member of the York and Scottish Rites, and his blue lodge, Dawson, No. 16, Free and Accepted Masons. For 15 years, he was a treasurer of this organization. He was also a member of Almas Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

For the past half century Maj. Walker was an active member of the Waugh Methodist Episcopal Church at Third and A streets. For 15 years he was superintendent of the Sunday school there. At the time of his death he was also chairman of the board of trustees of the Methodist Home for the Aged.

Mrs. Walker Survives
In 1872, Maj. Walker married Miss Sallie Brady of the Eastern Shore, who survives him. They were the parents of 11 children, eight living. February 22, 1922, Maj. and Mrs. Walker celebrated their golden wedding anniversary.

Besides his wife, the following children survive Maj Walker: Mrs. William B. Hardy, Miss Rosalie Walker, Mrs. H.J. Walthcr, Mrs. Maxwell Winter, Mrs. McClain Smith, Robert H. Walker and Arthur B. Walker. Besides these there are 16 grandchildren and 3 great-grandchildren, the last -- Nancy Lee Shantz -- born the second day of this year in Minnesota. Funeral arrangements have not yet been made.

A History of the City of Washington, Its Men and Institutions
Samuel H. Walker
No individual is more prominently identified with the development, improvement and general progression of northeast Washington than is Major Samuel H. Walker, real estate promoter and general and fire insurance agent, with offices in the Walker Building, at 458 Louisiana avenue. The march of time has seen East Washington grow, expand and improve, and many of these improvements are attributable to his efforts and farsighted instinct. Samuel H. Walker, son of Jonathan T. and Amelia Benson Walker, was born in this city on June 7, 1844. After attending Richards School at Fourteenth street and New York avenue, he entered Columbian University, then a college. His education complete, Mr. Walker immediately launched into a life of activity and usefulness. In 1861 he entered the clerks' office, city hall, in charge of land records. Mr. Walker afterwards engaged in the real estate and insurance business. His success was immediate, and his business steadily grew until it has reached its present large proportions. Mr. Walker formed the National Capital Investment Company, and was made its president. This company built and owns the District Building, which it rents to the District government. He has also been a director in the National Capital Bank since its organization and was the organizer of the Capital City Benefit Society, the largest of its kind in Washington. Mr. Walker has built many beautiful buildings in East Washington, notably among them his own residence at the corner of Fifth and B streets N.E. a structure both ornamental and commodious, having a style all its own, and designed after plans of Mr. Walker's conception.

Mr. Walker served three days, without enlistment, in the defense of Washington during the Civil War, and has the proud distinction of having been presented to every President of the United States, beginning with President Tyler. He was major and superintendent of the Police Department of the District in 1886. As a Mason his record is unparallel in the District, he having received every degree to the 33d in York Rite and Scottish Free Masonry, and Mystic Shrine, and is also a member of the Sigma Chi Fraternity.

Mr. Walker married Sallie L. Brady, of Benning, D.C., on February 22, 1872. Mr. and Mrs. Walker have nine children living.
The many friends of Major S.H. Walker will sympathize with him in his affliction--the death at an early hour this morning of his eight year old son a bright little fellow from diphtheria. Some of the Major's other children are still very sick with the same disease.

Walker, Samuel P.
d. 23 Jul 1834
Walker.  In this City, at 11 o'clock on Wednesday night, the 23d instant, after a long and painful illness, Samuel P. Walker, Esq. aged about 65 years, leaving a large and young family to lament his death. Mr. Walker was a native of Ireland, from which country he emigrated to Baltimore at an early age, and during the prime of his life was an active merchant in that city, until his removal to Washington, which took place a few years ago.

Walker.  At the residence of his mother, in this city, between 3 and 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, after a painful illness of ten or twelve days, Mr. Samuel Purviance Walker, second son of the late Samuel P. Walker, Esq.  His early death is deeply deplored by his afflicted family, and will be lamented by a large circle of friends, to whom his amiable temper and the excellent qualities of his heart had greatly endeared him.

The Funeral--at which his friends and those of the family are respectfully requested to attend without more particular notice--will take place from the residence of Mrs. Walker, on E street, at 5 o'clock this afternoon.

Walker, Sarah Catherine
d. 13 Sep 1834
Walker.  In this city, yesterday, at noon, Sarah Catharine Walker, aged 18 years, the eldest daughter of the late S.P. Walker, Esq. whose decease was announced in this paper but a few weeks ago. Endowed by nature with many virtues, this interesting young lady has been unexpectedly, after a short illness, snatched from a circle of attached relatives and friends, who will mourn over their loss. Thus, within less than two months, has this family been bereaved of a Father, and a devoted Daughter. Overwhelming as are these bereavements to a widowed mother and a numerous family, there is yet, for those that mourn, much and rich consolation in the belief that both the Father and the Child have been raised from a state of checkered and uncertain happiness to that peace which awaits the pure and upright in a better world.

To an understanding of no ordinary cast, the subject of this notice added a frankness and kindness of heart seldom found united in the same character. As a daughter and sister, she was unsurpassed in fidelity and affection, and her loss must be long and deeply felt by those who were the objects most dearly cherished by her while living.

The Funeral of the deceased will take place this day at 11 o'clock from the residence of her Mother on C street near Gadsby's Hotel.

Son of Maj. S.H. Walker Captured Near Occoquan, Va.

Stuart W. Walker, son of Maj. Samuel H. Walker, formerly superintendent of police of this city, was located yesterday afternoon near Manassas, Va., by Town Marshal Dawson of Occoquan, Va., and was returned to his home in this city late last evening. Young Walker was captured after a chase over Virginia roads and through Old Dominion woods. The boy left his home, 420 B street northeast, last Friday, and had been travelling through Virginia since.

The first clue as to the boy's whereabouts was given by a letter written to his father, postmarked Fairfax Court House, Va. Upon receipt of the communication Maj. Walker interested the police of that section of the country in a search for the boy. Another letter was posted at Occoquan yesterday morning. Immediately upon the receipt of that Maj. Walker determined to go to Occoquan and try to locate the boy. Meanwhile he notified police headquarters, and a telegram was sent to the authorities at Occoquan.

Town Marshal Dawson started out at once on horseback and with an extra horse to look for the boy, going in the direction of Manassas. When several miles from Occoquan he observed a boy walking along the road. As the description of Maj. Walker's son tallied with that of the boy on the road the town marshal started to get acquainted with him. He asked the boy to ride on the extra horse, and the invitation was accepted.
When they had ridden a short distance the town marshal told the boy what he wanted. The youth thereupon leaped from the horse and started on a run through neighboring woods. Town Marshal Dawson was hot on the trail, and the chase led over fields and through woods. But the town marshal finally won and captured the boy. He notified the local authorities and brought the youth here last night. Maj. Walker returned from Occoquan and took his boy home.

W.T. Walker's Funeral To Be Held Tomorrow
Prominent Resident Identified With Association of Oldest Inhabitants
Funeral services for William Tobias Walker, a native of Washington, who was for many years prominently identified with the business interests of the National Capital and a veteran Mason of the District, who died at his residence, 2156 California avenue northwest, early yesterday morning, will be held at his late home at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. Walker was born in South Washington October 26, 1831, and resided in that locality all of his life up to about six years ago, when he built himself a modern home in the new northwest, near the Highlands apartment. Mr. Walker's mother was an Englishwoman who came to this city when she was a girl and married the father of the deceased, a resident of Washington.

Engaged in Brickmaking
Mr. Walker was educated in the public schools of this city and when a young man started up in business as a grocer, conducting for many years a store at the corner of 11th street and Maryland avenue southwest. It was here that he started the foundation of his fortune and some time later began the business of brickmaking which grew rapidly into a large and profitable industry.

Mr. Walker was during the period following the civil war one of the leading brick manufacturers in the District and from his kilns came nearly all of the bricks that were used in construction work not only in South Washington, but in all sections of the city. His identification with that industry covered more than forty years, and during that time he has been very closely connected with many industrial and financial enterprises of large import. At the time of his death he was president of the W.T. Walker Brick Company, and despite his many years of active life was a potent force in the management of the firm's large interests.

He was a director of the Citizens' Bank from the time of its organization until it was merged with the Metropolitan Bank.

Member of Masonic Order
Mr. Walker was a member of Benjamin B. French Lodge, No. 15, F.A.A.M.; Washington Chapter, No. 2, R.A.M. and of DeMolahy Mounted Commandery, No. 4, Knights Templar, and also a Scottish Rite Mason. He was a director of the Masonic Mutual Life Association from its formation and its treasurer for nearly twenty years, resigning therefrom only a year ago on account of failing health.

Mr. Walker was a member of the Association of the Oldest Inhabitants and took a keen interest in its affairs for many years. He was a member of the Washington Heights Presbyterian Church and an active worker in the congregation.

Many years ago, when the District had suffrage and a common council, Mr. Walker represented his ward in South Washington in that body. He was a man of pronounced business ability and of uncompromising integrity, and was noted for his many charities and benefactions.

He is survived by five sons and five daughters and nine grandchildren. The sons are William H., George E., Charles J. Ernest T. and Arthur L., all of whom reside in Washington, and the daughters are Mrs. G.N.W. White of Kansas City, Mo.; Mrs. F.L. Hayes of Topeka, Kan.; Mrs. J.B. Carter, Miss Etta Walker and Miss Elinor Walker of this city. Mr. Walker is also survived by three brothers, R.A. Walker, T.H. Walker and F.M. Walker, all of this city.

On the 5th instant, at his residence in the country, after a long and painful illness, Zachariah Walker, Esq., one of our oldest and most respected citizens. At different periods he filled various public positions in our county, and in all of them acquitted himself well. It is not generally known at the present day, that our country was indebted to him for the removal and safe-keeping of its records during the capture of the city in 1814. He was one of the few who witnessed the laying of the corner stone of the Capitol and that of its extension. He was a native of this District, and the announcement of his death will be received with deep regret by a very large circle of friends and acquaintances, whose heartfelt sympathy will alleviate, it is hoped, the distress of his estimable wife.

William H. Wallace Third in His Family to Commit Suicide
William H. Wallace, twenty-nine years old, committed suicide yesterday afternoon by taking carbolic acid. Two sisters of Wallace ended their lives in the same manner during the past two years. Wallace had made an attempt at self-destruction several weeks ago, the police say, but it was not until yesterday that he was successful.

Wallace entered McCarthy's saloon at 468 K street northwest yesterday afternoon and made the statement: "My mother lives at 112 9h street southeast." No attention was paid to him, but persons in the place saw him presently take a bottle from his pocket and swallow its contents, but were unable to prevent it. The bottle had contained the fatal acid.

Wallace fell to the floor and soon became unconscious. Dr. Zinkhan responded to a call sent to the Emergency Hospital, took charge of the dying man and hurried him to the institution. He died a few minutes after reaching the hospital. A slip of paper taken from a pocket of Wallace's coat contained his mother's address. The latter was at once notified, and she went to the hospital, but reached there after Wallace had died. Nothing was found by the police which suggested a motive for the deed.

The deceased was a tinner. It is said he had not worked recently, and yesterday he was without funds.

Coroner Nevitt gave a certificate of death from carbolic acid poisoning, deciding, also, that the poison had been taken with suicidal intent. An undertaker prepared the body for burial.

The deceased of this most respectable and estimable Lady leaves a wide chasm in the society of our city, and especially in the circle of her connections and immediate friends. To her afflicted mother, her sorrowing husband, and bereaved children, the loss is irreparable. The only earthly consolation they can have must be found in the remembrance of her distinguished virtues, her Christian benevolence, and her life altogether irreproachable.

Death of Charles S. Wallach
Mr. Charles S. Wallach, died at his residence, No. 402 6th street, about 4 1/2 o'clock this morning, after a lingering illness. He was in the 55th year of his age. Deceased was a brother of the late W.D. Wallach, (former proprietor and editor of this paper) and of ex-Mayor Richard Wallach, and C.P. Wallach, Pay Director in the Navy. He was born in Washington, and received his earliest education in a school here in which the present Chief Justice Chase was teacher. Afterwards he went to Columbian College. He then studied law, and was admitted to the bar about 30 years ago. He resided for a time at Cleveland, Ohio, and in the days of Texan independence he was U.S. consul at Matagorda. On the annexation of Texas he returned to Washington, and for a time occupied the position of chief clerk of the Third Auditor's Office (under President Polk) which he resigned to resume the practice of the law, and up to the late war was in active practice in the courts here. In the early part of the war he went south and served in the confederate army, first as a paymaster with the rank of major, the most of the time at Petersburg, and then during the latter part of the war as depot quartermaster at Petersburg. He returned to this city shortly after the war. He leaves a widow and three sons. His funeral will take place on Monday next.

Next door to the McCalla home was where Mr. Charles S. Wallach lived early in the fifties, and until his death about twenty years ago. His eldest son was a dentist in Paris about 1880, but I have been unable to get further news of him. The two younger sons continued to be residents of this city until their death within the last ten years.

Wallach, Ellen The Evening Star, October 30, 1894
Death of Miss Wallach
Miss Ellen Wallach, aged 94 years, died Sunday at the Home of the Incurables. She retired to that institution as a boarder, about four years ago. Miss Wallach was born in Boston. Her father was Moses Wallach, a native of Prussia, and her mother a Miss Mary Robbins, who belonged to one of the oldest New England families. In early life she mingled in the first society of Washington. She was in Washington during the war. An enthusiastic sympathizer of the southern cause, she furnished many of the southern soldiers with money and clothing. After the war she came to this city, where had since resided. While in Washington her home was with her brother, the late Richard Wallach. She was a beautiful woman, and her eyesight was remarkable well preserved. She never wore glasses. She was attended in her last illness by her niece, Mrs. Judge T.M. Arrington of Montgomery, Ala. The remains were interred in the Congressional Cemetery.

Wallach, J.M. Carlisle May he rest in peace.

Mr. Wallach was a native of Boston; but, after leaving college, he became an inhabitant of this city, and qualified himself for admission to the Bar. Estimable in all the walks of life, it was, however, for the domestic and social virtues that he was most conspicuous. Had he asked us, well we know
We should say, "O spare the blow."
Yes, with streaming tears should pray,
Lord, we love him, let him stay.
In love he lived, in peace he died
His life was asked, but God denied.

Walls. On Saturday, March 13th, 1886, at 8:25 o'clock, after a lingering illness, Mrs. Mary S. Walls, the beloved wife of the late James F. Walls, in the 69th year of her age.

The winter of trouble has past,
The storms of afflictions are o'er,
The struggle is ended at last,
And sorrow and death are no more.

Her wearied limbs are now at rest,
Suffering and pain with her are o'er,
She has gone to meet her friends, whom God hath blessed,
In Heaven, where we shall part no more.

The angels caught her softly
And bore her up the steep.
The golden gates closed behind her,
And we remain to weep.

By Her Niece.

Her funeral will take place from her brother's residence, James R. West, corner Half and O streets southeast, at 3:30 o'clock Tuesday evening, March 16th.

Despondent Over Love

Hunter Ware Ended His Life by a Pistol Shot

Religious Differences Prevented His Happiness--

Well-Known and Popular Resident of Anacostia

T.H. Ware, familiarly known as Hunter Ware, committed suicide yesterday afternoon about 4 o'clock, in the office of C. Dodge's livery stable, on Harrison street, in Anacostia. Death resulted from a pistol shot, the bullet passing through his heart.

It is the old story of a disappointed lover, despondent, and caring not to live. The deceased came to Anacostia about three years ago, and after being engaged in driving one of the Anacostia cars, went into the business of horse dealing. He was a young man of exemplary habits, and until a year ago had nothing to trouble his mind. About that time, however, he noticed for the first time a pretty brunette, petite in figure, and with large, expressive dark eyes, jet black eyebrows and curly black hair. The young lady's acquaintance was sought, and as she was the niece of Mr. J.F. Feddon, an Anacostia merchant and a friend of Ware's, it was not long before the young people were well acquainted. The girl's name is Miss Cora Lane, and she is the daughter of Rev. William Lane, who is assistant pastor of the Methodist Church South of West Lombard street, Baltimore. She is just eighteen years of age, and Ware was twenty-three. A bar to their courtship was found in the person of Mr. Isaac Lane, the uncle of Miss Lane, with whose family she lived, at 1008 M street southeast. Her uncle refused to allow her to have company, and Ware was compelled to meet her clandestinely. Correspondence was carried on through the medium of a little colored boy, a protege of Ware's. In every instance the letters to Miss Lane were addressed to "No. 25." The uncle and aunt soon discovered the state of affairs, however, and refused to allow her to see Ware. It was at this time that he proposed marriage. Miss Lane communicated with her father, and her reply was a set-back to young Ware.

Born of Catholic parents, reared a Catholic and imbued with Catholic ideas, Ware was suddenly confronted with a condition, viz., that he leave his church and become a Methodist. Miss Lane's father could not consent to her marrying a Catholic, she would not disobey him, and Ware said he would be true about it, the Catholic ideas were something that, try as he might, could not be changed. For a short time there was little change in the condition of matters, Ware still meeting her, renewing his vows and pressing his suit. On more than one occasion he threatened to commit suicide because of her refusal, but was persuaded not to do it.

The Girl's Story

A Star representative saw Miss Lane at her home on M street yesterday afternoon, a short time after the suicide, and she related the story of the whole affair, corroborating the above facts. She stated further: "He met me in Anacostia this afternoon, and came over on the care with me and walked to the gate. He renewed his proposition, which I was compelled to treat as before. He threatened to commit suicide and I endeavored to persuade him not to. On another occasion he said he would do so, but my aunt, who saw him at the door, reminded him of his mother, father and family, and kept him from the act."

Leaving Miss Lane, Ware yesterday returned to Anacostia, and at the livery stable of Mr. Dodge saw George Green, his little colored boy. He told George to remain around the stable, as he might have something for him to take over in the city. Entering the office of the stable he sat down and commenced writing. The note finished, he suddenly thrust it in a stove which contained no fire. It read:

"Mr. Dodge: I have given George my key to my trunk and he will give it to you, and I don't want you to give it to no one but my mother, and tell her that my letters in my trunks for not to let no one see them." In the office were Herbert Martin, a white boy and Ed. Ferguson, a colored boy. Taking a pistol from his pocket, Hunter Ware pointed it to his head and said he was going to shoot. "For God's sake, don't," said Martin, and for the moment the question turned upon the pistol, which was a thirty-two caliber, with six chambers.

Apparently changing his mind, Ware next put the pistol to his side. A report, a puff of smoke, and Ware fell forward on his face. Dr. H.V. Pyles and Dr. James Watson responded to a call. Dr. Pyles arrived in time to discover the clothing still on fire from the blaze of the pistol. After six or seven gasps the young horse trader was dead. The shooting spread through the village, and when it was known that it was Hunter Ware, a messenger was immediately dispatched to the home of John Ware, father of the deceased, who resides in Prince George's county.

Business Reverses

Coroner Hammet was summoned, and after viewing the body, and hearing the statement of the witnesses, decided death to be suicidal, and gave a certificate accordingly. The remains were turned over to Sanderson...
& Scott, who will have charge of the funeral arrangements. Acquaintances of Ware told of reverses in his business. Not over a week ago a valuable horse of his died, and recently a more valuable one went lame. Inquiry at the boarding house of Mr. Sears, where Ware lived, showed that on two former occasions he had endeavored to commit suicide. Sunday before last one attempt was made, but Sears prevented him by securing the pistol. Last Sunday he again attempted to end his life, but was prevented in the same way.

The father of the deceased is well known in Prince George's county, and is a prominent republican of the Oxon Hill district.

Arrangements for the funeral of the deceased have been made. It will take place from the office of Sanderson & Scott, on Monroe street, Anacostia. This is because of the rule of the Catholic Church prohibiting services at the church, and there will be no service, owing to similar doctrines. The funeral procession will leave Anacostia at 2 o'clock, and interment will be in Congressional Cemetery.

Young Ware Buried
Laid Away in Congressional Cemetery Without Presence of Priest
The funeral of Hunter Ware, who committed suicide Tuesday afternoon in Anacostia, took place this afternoon at 2 o'clock from the office of Sanderson & Scott, undertakers. The pallbearers were Messrs. Charles R. Dodge, James Swift, Charles Campbell, John Fowler, William Grimes and Gibbons. The interment was in Congressional cemetery. An effort was made to secure the services of Father Hughes of St. Teresa's Church to officiate, but he had left for the city, and the rector of the Catholic Church of Prince George's county was ill in bed. The friends of the deceased were prepared to prove to the minister that the act was one of insanity, which would permit of a funeral service by a priest, but no priest could be found in time.

The Ware Suicide
Some Letters Found Which Start a New Rumor
Three letters found among the effects of the late Hunter Ware, who committed suicide in Anacostia recently, throw new light on the cause of the deed. In the first interview with The Star reporter Miss Lane acknowledged that she had maintained a correspondence with Mr. Ware, each signing themselves by numbers. The newly found letters are two from Miss Lane and one a returned letter from the deceased to her. The two from the young lady are addressed to "My dear husband," and signed "Your loving little girl wife, No. 25." Ware's letter to Miss Lane was addressed to "My darling wife," and signed "Your husband, No. 18." These letters were found in the trunk of Hunter Ware at the boarding house of Mr. Thomas Sears, at Jefferson and Fillmore streets, Anacostia, and were the remains of a correspondence of 200 letters, which were burned the day of the suicide. Miss Lane did not deny writing the letters signed "Your darling wife," but excused her action by a statement that through fear of her life being taken she had acquiesced in Ware's request to do this, and also stated that Ware had once threatened to kill her if she did not marry him.

Drowned While Bathing

Two Young Men Lose Their Lives Saturday Evening

Coroner Carr was called upon yesterday to give certificates of death in the case of the two young men who were drowned at the bathing beach Saturday. One of the victims was William F. Gaskins, eighteen years old, of No. 3040 Rock Creek Church road, and the other was Milton Warfield, 27 years old, who lived at 1217 E street northwest.

Milton Warfield was a clerk in Morcoe's cigar store. He went to the river about 9 o'clock Saturday night with several friends. They hired a boat and went some distance from shore, where they disrobed and went in the water. Soon after it was known that Warfield had disappeared under the water his body was recovered and taken ashore. Later in the night it was conveyed to the morgue by Superintendent Schonenberger.

The parents of the two men were notified and they took charge of the remains.

O, mother dear, since you are gone
Unto your long, last home
And left us--your dear children
In sorrow to think on
The many years that you have spent
And labored for our sakes,
To make us happy--after you
Our hearts might surely break;
But since it's so short we must go,
And part our dearest friends.
To the Most High, with heartfelt sigh.
Thy soul we recommend,
Dear mother, amen!

Death of a Baptist Minister

Yesterday, the residents of the eastern section of the city were pained by the announcement of the decease of Rev. Patrick Warren, who was lately the pastor in charge of the Second (Navy Yard) Baptist Church, corner of 4th street and Virginia avenue southeast. Mr. Warren filled the pulpit of that church for over two years, up to the 1st of January last. Mr. Warren came here from the Eastern Shore of Virginia, having sustained serious losses during the war, and on taking charge of the congregation soon became a favorite, not only with the members, but with the people generally, of that section of the city. He went to work zealously in his new field, and by his exemplary course of life showed that he was indeed a devoted follower of Christ. Being over fifty years of age, and his constitution being much weakened, by continued attacks of the chills, and feeling that he was unable to be as active in the performance of the many duties devolved upon him, as the necessities of the church required, he resigned his pastorate. For several weeks past he was unable to leave his residence--on 4th street, adjoining the church--and during the past week his illness increased. His death occurred about 11 o'clock yesterday, just about the time the services in the church had been commenced by Rev. C. Tvee, of Va., (who is filling the pulpit this week.) The announcement of his death was made at the close of the sermon yesterday, and was received with sadness by the congregation. His funeral will take place from the church at 2 o'clock tomorrow, when the Rev. Dr. J.M. Williams, of Baltimore, an old and intimate friend of the deceased, will preach the funeral sermon.

The Evening Star, March 14, 1871

Death of a Baptist Minister, Ed. Star

Rev. P. Warren, whose death was noticed in your paper yesterday, did not come to this city until nearly three years after the close of the war. During the war, Rev. W.T. Johnson was pastor of the church. He resigned about the close of the war, and some months afterwards the Rev. Dr. J. Bray became its pastor, officiating for over two years. Mr. Warren was called and accepted the call afterwards. He resigned the charge several months ago, not "on account of his failing health," but for other causes, as stated by him at the time.

Death of Miss Washington

Closely Allied to Family of the First President

Miss Elizabeth Lee Washington died Saturday last at her home in Jefferson place. She was a lineal descendant of John Washington, the ancestor of the first President of the United States, and of Richard Bland Lee of revolutionary fame. Her father was Dr. Bailey Washington, surgeon, U.S.N., who served with distinction through the War of 1812 and Mexican war.

Miss Washington was prominent in the patriotic societies of Washington, being a charter member of the Colonial Dames and the Daughters of the American Revolution, where her relationship, as well as the fact that she had inherited many very valuable relics of the Washington and Lee families, made her quite conspicuous. Cerebral hemorrhage was the immediate cause of her death.

The deceased was a sister of the late Mrs. Walter D. Davidge and leaves surviving her a sister, Mrs. P.B. Reading, the wife of the late Maj. Reading of California, who served with Fremont and others in the early history of that state.

Col. Washington Dead

One of the Best Known Newspaper Men in Washington

Confederate Soldier

A Relative of the Distinguished First President

Had Wide Acquaintance Among Public Men and Was Prominent in the Confederate Government

Col. Littleton Quinter Washington of this city died at 1 o'clock this morning at the home of his brother-in-law, Dr. Warwick Evans, 1105 9th street northwest. Col. Washington was one of the best-known newspaper correspondents and writers on political matters of this city and for the past half of a century. He had lived. here practically all his life, though during the civil war he was absent in the service of the confederacy. He was born in this city November 3, 1825, and was educated here and at Bethlehem, Pa. He was of the famous Washington family of Virginia, being of a collateral branch of the family of the first President of the United States.

When the war broke out Col. Washington went south and entered the military service, being shortly after appointed chief clerk of the department of state of the confederacy. In that capacity he had the most confidential relations with both Secretaries Benjamin and Hunter. Toward the close of the war Col. Washington was acting assistant secretary of state of the confederacy. The intimacy established during this period by Col. Washington with leading southern men was continued throughout his life, and his correspondence with prominent men was of the most confidential nature.

His Services as Correspondent
After the close of the war he returned to this city, and during the balance of his lifetime acted as correspondent for newspapers, chiefly of the south, and wrote extensively on political matters. He wrote a life of Hunter, under whom he had served in the state department of the confederacy. He entered the press gallery in 1869 as writer for the National Intelligencer and correspondent for the London Telegraph, the latter connection being retained during many years. For some years he was correspondent of the New Orleans Picayune and other newspapers of the south.

Colonel Washington never married, and for fifty-five years had lived at the home of his brother-in-law, Dr. Warwick Evans, with the exception of the war period, during which he was absent in the south. His bachelor apartments were filled with rare books and he spent much of his time reading them. His knowledge of southern history from early colonial times was very complete and exact. In past years he frequently entertained some of the most distinguished statesmen of the country at his table, and his hospitality, while always simple in its nature, was greatly enjoyed by his friends. His wide store of general information and his ready memory made him an extremely entertaining conversationalist.

Ill-Health Cause of Retirement
During recent years Colonel Washington's failing health made it necessary that he should give up the work of an active correspondent, and a year and a half ago he was confined to his room, and, except to go out riding a couple of times, he has been in his home ever since. His last illness had confined him to his bed for five months. He was conscious to the moment of his death. During the last week he had been preparing for the end and had destroyed large quantities of his private papers. This included correspondence he had during many years, together with his personal journal, the latter being burned by him a few hours before he died. Shortly before the end came he spoke to his niece, saying he knew he would die just as his mother had died — that he would choke to death. Only a few minutes later he was seized with convulsive choking and passed away.

Perhaps no one could boast a larger circle of friends than had Colonel Washington. A typical southerner in his manner and language, he attracted men and formed lasting friendships. His father, Mr. Lund Washington, sr., of Chotank, King George county, Va., was a frequent visitor to Mount Vernon, the home of his distinguished relative, and his mother was known before her marriage as Sally Johnson. She was the daughter of Captain John Johnson of Worcester county, Md.

Eastern Shore Planters
Col. Washington's maternal ancestors were planters of the Eastern Shore of Maryland and Virginia in the colonial period. His father was a typical Virginian of the old school, was born in 1767 and was named for his uncle, Mr. Lund Washington, the neighbor, kinsman and confidential correspondent of George Washington for many years.

All of the family were identified with the revolutionary cause, one of them, an uncle of Col. Washington, dying as a prisoner in the British post ship Jersey at the age of seventeen years, rather than to take the oath of allegiance to the crown. Through his father, Col. Washington was related to the Mason family of Gunston, and the Stuart, Dade, Foote, Strother, Lund and Townshend families of Virginia.

Arrangements for the funeral have not yet been made.

A meeting of Washington correspondents will be held tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock at the Baltimore Sun bureau, F street between 13th and 14th streets, for the purpose of taking appropriate action with reference to the death of Col. Washington.

Funeral Services Over the Remains of L.Q. Washington

The funeral of L.Q. Washington took place this afternoon. Services were held at Trinity P.E. Church, corner of 3d and C streets. The interment will be private. The pallbearers were selected from among Col. Washington's oldest and most intimate friends and were as follows:

Last Rites Over Dead

Remains of Col. Washington Buried in Congressional Cemetery

The funeral of Col. L.Q. Washington took place yesterday afternoon from Trinity P.E. Church, corner of C and 3d streets. There was a large attendance at the church, among those present being Senator Gorman of Maryland and Senator J.K. Jones of Arkansas, both personal friends of the deceased.

The remains were removed from the home of Dr. Warwick Evans, 1105 9th street, to the church. At the church the Episcopal service was read by Rev. Richard P. Williams, the rector. Preceding and following the service hymns were sung. The interment was made at the Congressional cemetery and was private.

The casket was covered with three beautiful floral tributes which were sent by the newspaper correspondents of this city, by the Virginia Democratic Club of the District of Columbia, and by Mr. H.B.F. Macfarland, president of the board of Commissioners.

Baltimore Md., November 1

Norval Watkins, twenty two years old of 609 8th street northeast, Washington, D.C., died early this morning at the Franklin Square Hospital, from injuries sustained in being thrown from a large auto truck.

The accident occurred shortly after 2 o'clock this morning at Mount Winans about a mile and a half outside the city limits, on the Washington road. The auto truck, which was an exceptionally large vehicle, left Washington last evening.
On it were seventeen young men, an equal number of young women and a colored chauffeur. Several of the riders were standing, and others were sitting on the side rails when the chauffeur discovering some obstacle in the roadway, caused the vehicle to swerve sharply toward one side of the road.

Unprepared for the sharp turn, young Watkins fell from the turn, young Watkins fell from the auto-truck, which was passing a steep embankment at the time, and down this the young man rolled quickly, striking several large stones and pieces of wood in course.

The auto truck was quickly stopped, and members of the party climbed down the embankment. When Watkins was reached it was found that he was unconscious. He was quickly borne up the embankment and placed in the auto truck, which was rushed to the Franklin Square Hospital. There it was found that he was suffering from a fractured skull and serious internal injuries.

Funeral of Straw-Ride Victim to Be Held Tomorrow

Funeral services for Norval Watkins, who died at Franklin Square Hospital, Baltimore Saturday morning as a result of injuries he sustained by falling over an embankment near Mount Winans, Md., while on a Halloween straw-ride Friday night, will be held at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon at the home of his parents, 609 8th street northeast. Interment will be at Congressional cemetery.

Watkins' body was brought from Baltimore this morning. Cornelius Ray, the colored chauffeur who drive the car in which the strawride party went to Baltimore, was sent to that city yesterday. He was questioned and released.

Ray will return to Baltimore tonight to give testimony at the inquest that is to be conducted to have a jury determine the question of blame for Watkins' death. Coroner Abrams of the southwestern district will hold the inquest at the southwest police station.

Fatal Fall From a Stairway

Mr. Samuel Watkins, a Post Office Department clerk, while going up stairs to his room in the Tremont House, Saturday night, upon reaching the second landing tottered and fell over the ballistrade to the main floor beneath, striking head first on an iron-bound trunk. Several of the guests picked him up, and he was taken to his room and Drs. Elliott and Tarkington sent for. They found that his skull had been crushed in and his right thigh broken in two places; also that he had been injured internally. He died about 3 o'clock yesterday morning. The coroner deemed an inquest unnecessary. It is supposed that he was attacked with vertigo, with which he sometimes suffered, and losing his balance, fell over the stairway. Mr. Watkins arrived in this country in the early part of 1861 from Manchester, England, where he had been engaged in mercantile business, and enlisted in the United States service, out of purely patriotic motives, as a private in a New York regiment, and soon earned promotion. At the close of his term of service he served with Gen. Donaldson in the army of the Tennessee and later in Baltimore. He subsequently entered the Post Office department, where, on account of his excellent record, he was promoted to a high grade under the superintendent of the railway postal service. Mr. Watkins leaves a wife and child and a host of friends to mourn his sudden death.

_Monoxide Kills Two, And Another May Die_
_Mrs. Burlingame and Mrs. Watson Dead -- Washwoman in Critical State_
Deadly carbon monoxide gas snuffed out two lives yesterday and left a third victim in a critical condition. The dead are Mrs. Lola M. Burlingame, wife of Harry T. Burlingame, desk sergeant at the fifth precinct police station, and Mrs. Stella Watson whose husband is a bartender. Mrs. Helen Naylor a colored washerwoman, was found in a critical condition and taken to the Casualty Hospital. Physicians say she may die.

The three women were found in the Burlingame apartment at 1443 1/2 A street southeast, about 7 o'clock p.m., when Mr. Burlingame returned home from the police station. Mrs. Burlingame and Mrs. Watson were on the bed in the sleeping apartment, while the colored woman was seated in the kitchen, where the subtle poison had been generated by a water heater.

_Dead Several Hours_
Mrs. Burlingame had been dead several hours physicians from the Casualty Hospital stated but Mrs. Watson was still breathing. She died while being conveyed to the hospital. Mrs. Naylor, although in the room in which the poisonous gas was generated, was in much better condition than was Mrs. Watson, and the physicians hurried her to the hospital. She was unconscious and unable to offer any explanation of the case.

When Burlingame saw that his wife was dead, and that Mrs. Watson and the colored woman were in a critical condition he sent a hurried message to the police station where he had been on duty all day.

Physicians labored hard to prolong Mrs. Watson's life and save the life of the colored woman. When the hospital was reached it was found that Mrs. Watson was dead, while the colored woman was improving, although her condition was critical.

_Pulmotor Is Used_
As soon as Coroner Nevitt reached the hospital to view the body of Mrs. Watson he suggested the use of a pulmotor on the colored woman and the instrument was quickly supplied by the Washington Gas Light Company, and it was used to good effect. Coroner Nevitt said the pulmotor a fighting chance for life.

Coroner Nevitt made an investigation of the affair, and at an autopsy this afternoon it was declared Mrs. Watson's death was due to carbon monoxide poisoning.

There was an utter lack of a ventilating pipe to the water heater, the coroner stated, and there was no escape for the fumes He said today that he will send a communication to the Commissioners on the fatality.

Arrangements have been made for the funeral of Mrs. Burlingame to take place from Lee's chapel at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. The interment will be at Congressional cemetery. Mrs. Burlingame was Miss Lola Ellwood before her marriage ten years ago. No arrangements have been made for the funeral of Mrs. Watson.

_Services for Mrs. Burlingame and Mrs. Watson, Monoxide Victims_
Funeral services for Mrs. Lola M. Burlingame and Mrs. Stella Watson, who were killed Wednesday by carbon monoxide gas escaping from a hot water heater at the home of Mrs. Burlingame, were conducted at Lee's chapel at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Rev. V. Hinson Howlett, pastor of the Second Baptist Church, officiated, and the interments were in Congressional cemetery.

Mrs. Helen Naylor, colored, who suffered from the poison in the kitchen of the Burlingame apartment, at 1443 1/2 A street southeast, at the time the two women named were suffocated, was still in a critical condition.

David Watterston was a native of Jedberg, Scotland, and came to this city in the year 1791 and was employed on the Capitol Bldg. When he died on the 22d day of February, 1823, in the 70th year of his age, he had been a resident of the city for 32 years and was spoken of in the Intelligencer as one of the oldest inhabitants of Washington. His son, George Watterston, was for a number of years the Librarian of Congress. In connection with Robert Speiden, he opened a marble yard near the Capitol in the summer of 1799, the firm describing themselves in an advertisement in the "Centinel of Liberty," as stone cutters from Edinburgh. After a lapse of one year came the announcement of the dissolution of the partnership, Mr. Watterston retiring from the firm.

The National Intelligencer, Monday, February 6, 1854

On Saturday morning last, at his residence on Capitol Hill, George Watterston, Esq., one of the oldest and most esteemed citizens of Washington. A witness in early childhood to the laying of the corner-stone of the Capitol, he manifested throughout his life a constant devotion to the interests of the National Metropolis. To his early and untiring labors, pursued through all vicissitudes, may be mainly ascribed the success of the great enterprise of erecting in this city the Monument to the memory of the Father of his Country by the contributions of the People, and with that proud memorial of a Nation's gratitude his name is indissolubly associated. Honored by various public trusts, he discharged them all with ability, and in all displayed the same strict integrity, diligence, and loyalty to duty which marked his character in private life. He was also distinguished for his love of letters, as manifested by his frequent compositions on moral, political, and literary subjects. Though ardent in temperament, he was modest and unobtrusive in manner. His sterling merits were most highly estimated by those who had longest known him; and during his mortal illness, protracted for nearly six weeks, the universal and deep anxiety of his neighbors was a tribute to his character which cannot be mistaken.

The Funeral will take place this afternoon, from his late residence on Capitol Hill, at 3 o'clock. The friends of the family are requested to attend, without further notice.

The first full-time Librarian of Congress was born aboard a ship in New York harbor on October 23, 1783. George Watterston was the son of David Watterston, an emigrant master-builder who had left Jedburgh, Scotland, with his family in order to start a new life in New York City. Eight years later, lured by the opportunities afforded by the creation of the new federal city, the elder Watterston moved with his family to Washington, D.C. Young George was sent to school at Charlotte Hall in St. Mary's County, Maryland, where he received a good classical education. He was then attracted to the study of law, and later opened a law office in Hagerstown, Maryland. Law was not for him, however, for he soon began a literary career that continued throughout his life.

His growing distaste for the legal profession became apparent in his first novel, “The Lawyer, or Man as He Ought Not to Be” (1808), a psychological study of a thoroughly despicable character. He touched on a lighter theme for his next work, “The Child of Feeling: A Comedy in Five Acts (1809) which was followed closely by a second novel, “Glencarn: or The Disappointments of Youth” (1810). The death of a rich uncle gave him an excuse to close his law office and travel to the West Indies to view his inheritance. He kept a journal of the trip and drew upon his experiences for his next literary endeavor, a poem entitled, “The Wanderer in Jamaica” (1810), which he prefaced with a dedication to Dolley Madison, wife of the President, as evident from the reputation you have acquired for desirous to promote the cause of general literature.” Upon returning from his travels, Watterston opened a law office in Washington with Thomas Law. On October 26, 1811, he married Maria Shanley and established a home on Capitol Hill. They had eight children.

The 29-year-old Watterston, now an established inhabitant of the new District of Columbia, soon began his involvement with the political and social life of the city of his childhood; as a result, he soon became one of Washington’s first civic and cultural leaders. In 1812, he became a candidate for the position of collector of the District of Columbia. The next year he was engaged as the editor of the “Washington City Gazette,” a Republican paper, the first of four newspaper editorships he was to hold throughout his life. The war with England raged around the city, and, in 1814, Watterston marched with Captain Benjamin Burch’s company to meet the British at nearby Bladensburg. He returned to the city to find his own house pillaged, the nearby Capitol in ruins, and, of future importance to him the fledgling Library of Congress within the Capitol building destroyed.

Prior to 1815, the clerk of the House of Representatives had the additional responsibility of caring for the Library of Congress. Patrick Magruder (q.v.), clerk of the House at that time, was discredited by those who thought he should have done something to save the Library before its destruction during the British occupation of the city. Because of the ill feeling that arose over this event, Magruder resigned his position on January 28, 1815. As a further consequence, it was determined that the position of Librarian should be distinct from the office of clerk of the House. Accordingly, on March 21, 1815, President Madison appointed George Watterston as the first full-time Librarian of Congress. While the legend persists that the dedication of his poem to Dolley Madison was responsible, the real reason was probably Watterston’s unique position as Washington’s only man of letters.

Watterston pursued his new duties with vigor. Indeed, he was responsible for all of the work in the Library, with the exception of the selection of materials, a pleasure reserved for the Joint Library Committee. Not until 1827 was he officially allowed to hire an assistant. Yet he approached his job with imagination and a vision as to what the Library should become, a vision that frequently clashed with the more practical realities posited by the Library Committee. His first job was to receive and arrange the library of Thomas Jefferson (q.v.), purchased in early 1815. The Library had been moved to temporary quarters in Blodgett’s Hotel, where Watterston arranged the wooden packing cases containing the Jefferson collection and began work on a catalog. On April 26, 1815, he wrote to Jefferson asking for the former President’s system of arrangement,” which was based on the 44 “chapters” comprising Francis Bacon’s table of knowledge. The Librarian decided to adopt the system in general, although he modified it by alphabetizing the books within chapters, rather than using the analytical or chronological subdivisions that Jefferson had devised.

In October 1815, Watterston’s “Catalogue of the Library of the United States” went to press, with copies delivered to the Library Committee prior to December 4. Jefferson, when queried by the anxious Librarian as to how he liked the new arrangement within the chapters, replied mildly in a letter dated march 2, 1816, “Of course, you know, not so well as my own, yet I think it … may be more convenient to readers generally than mine…” But the Library Committee members were distinctly unhappy. They did not consider the catalog to be of particular use to the members of Congress and, in their report of January 26, 1816, complained about its cost—a grand total of $1360.50 for 600 copies, “one third more than the annual appropriation made heretofore by Congress for the additional increase of the library, and more than one twentieth of the actual cost of our whole library.” Despite the Committee’s attitude, Jefferson’s classification system as adapted by Watterston was used by the Library of Congress for the rest of the century.

The controversial title of the “Catalogue” was not mentioned in the Committee’s report. Nevertheless, it does illustrate that Watterston wanted the Library to be more than just Congress’s personal possession. Indeed, despite the Committee’s concern with the “miscellanies” of the current collection, Watterston inserted a “Card” into the September 15, 1815, issue of “The National Intelligencer” asking “that American authors, engravers, and painters who are solicitous to preserve their respective productions as mementos of the taste of the times, would transit to the Library a copy of such work as they may design for the public eye ….” The letter was issued from the “Library of the United States” and signed “George Watterston, Librarian of Congress.” Later Librarians, of course, expanded upon Watterston’s early ambitious attempts to build a truly national collection, in addition to a separate building. For on March 25, 1817, another letter written by the persistent Librarian argued for a new building for “the Library of the United States,” the first of such dreams to haunt successive Librarians.

Watterston’s desire for a building was thwarted, however, for on December 3, 1818, an act was approved that moved the Library to the north wing of the reconstructed Capitol. These quarters proved to be inadequate, and, in 1824, the Library was again moved, this time to the center reported in “The National Intelligencer” (August 28, 1823) to be “the most delightful part of the building, commanding a fascinating view of the most populous part of our city, and of the whole length of the Avenue that connects it with the other Public Watterston’s duties as Librarian did not deter his literary endeavors. Although he became more of an interpreter, critic, and journalist than an imaginative writer after his appointment, he did publish two more novels, which some critics think to be his most important creative works. In both “The L— Family in Washington; or a Winter in the Metropolis” (1822) and “The Wanderer in Washington” (1827), Watterston used Washington society for his setting, the first writer of fiction to do so. His interests were wide, and he contributed journalistic pieces to local papers on a variety of topics, including landscape gardening, local and national politics, music, education, and horticulture. In 1816, he became one of the founders of the Washington Botanical Society and, a year later, published a pamphlet on the history, culture, and uses of tobacco. Politics always intrigued him, and in the same year he assumed the editorship of a political paper (the “National Register”) for a time. Under his direction, the “splendid rooms” of the Library became a literary salon, where the leading men and women of letters gathered to read and discuss issues of the day. His critical pieces concerning his contemporaries were surprisingly accurate. At the same time, the Library received increasing support, mainly through the efforts of the Library Committee; on May 26, 1826, Congress raised the book budget to $5,000, a sum granted annually for many decades thereafter.

While his “boosting” of Washington brought him great local prominence, his avid participation in politics proved his downfall. In 1827, he began writing regularly for the “National Journal,” turning it into an organ for the Whig cause. His support of the Whigs and Henry Clay had continued unabated since 1818, when he published his “Letters from Washington, on the Constitution, Laws, and Public Characters of the United States.” Democratic President Andrew Jackson had no use for him in his new government and summarily dismissed him on May 28, 1829. Watterston was indignant. He stomped out of the Library carrying the record books with him. For the rest of his life, he attempted to regain his appointment, but it was a fruitless effort, even though the Whigs won the presidency twice in the next fifteen years. He finally expressed his contempt for the situation in 1850, when he rejected his party and became a Democrat.

Watterston’s notorious contemporary, Anne Royall, newspaperwoman and fellow writer, “was much struck with his gentlemanly appearance and manners.” In her eyes Watterston appeared as: “a man of good size, neither spare nor robust; he is a fine figure and possessed of some personal beauty; his complexion fair, his countenance striking, shows genius and deep penetration, marked with gravity, though manly and commanding. A sweet serenity diffuses itself over his countenance, which no accident can ruffle; and under the veil of retiring modesty, discovers his blushing honors thick upon him.”

He was charming and loyal to his friends, a realist who had to support himself largely by his writings. He had a happy home life, and maintained an affectionate interest in the activities of his children long after they had grown. Yet his behavior during the years he attempted to regain his position demonstrated that he was think-skinned, outspoken to the point of being abusive, and filled—as historian David Mearns aptly described in “The Story Up to Now”—with a “sense of superiority” that caused him to become deeply embittered. Despite his futile attempts to regain his former job, he maintained a comfortable position and continued in his efforts to give Washington a place in the literature of the day. His success in this endeavor became apparent when “The Southern Literary Messenger,” to which Watterston had contributed many articles, dubbed him the “Metropolitan Author” after the appearance of the second of his Washington guidebooks, “A New Guide to Washington” (1842). (“A Picture of Washington” had appeared in 1840.)

In 1830, Watterston became the editor of the “National Journal.” Three years later, he began the movement to build the Washington Monument and remained as secretary of the Washington National Monument Society until his death, which occurred on February 4, 1854. Little mention was made of his passing. A notice of his death that appeared in “The National Intelligencer” on February 6, 1854, ironically made no mention of his years as Librarian and passed quickly over the literary achievements. Instead, it concentrated almost entirely on his activities with the Monument Society.

Although he is almost entirely forgotten now, George Watterston, the first full-time Librarian of Congress, had a definite impact on the Library during his fourteen-year tenure. Starting with 6,500 volumes in 1815, the Library contained 15,000 volumes in 1829, placing it fourth among libraries in the United States. The book budget was increased from $1,000 to $5,000 to be provided on an annual basis. The Library had become a leading literary center in the new federal city, which was still trying to prove itself. Most important, perhaps, is the fact that George Watterston was the first of a number of distinguished Librarians who envisaged the Library of Congress as a national repository for American cultural history and have sought ever since to reach that objective.

<td>Erastus C. Weaver, who died Monday at his home, 512 8th street northwest, in this city, took place this morning from Hamline M.E. Church. Though he had been an invalid for a long time, Mr. Weaver's death came suddenly and caused a great shock to his family and many friends. He retired about 10 o'clock Sunday night and was compelled to leave his bed about midnight. At the time he was affected with acute pain in the region of his heart, but feeling no uneasiness concerning his condition delayed awhile calling the members of his family. However, it was not long before he realized the seriousness of his suffering and summoned to his side his wife and children. A physician was sent for immediately, but before his arrival Mr. Weaver was dead. He was a man widely known and held in high esteem in this city, where he spent the last thirty-two years of his life. He was born in the town of Laurens, Otsego county, New York, on the 28th day of June, 1829, and resided in the empire state until July 14, 1862, when he marched to the front as first sergeant of Company K, 121st New York Volunteer Infantry. He served with great gallantry, participating in twenty-five battles and winning finally the rank of captain. At the close of the war he was appointed to a position of trust in the office of the paymaster general of the army, which he held for a time, later beginning the practice of his profession, the law. This was in 1874, and from that time until 1888, when his health began to fail, he was well known in the District of Columbia as an attorney, justice of the peace and commissioner of deeds. During a part of this time he served as a member of the board of assessors of the District, and was honored with other duties in connection with the local government. At the funeral services this morning the sermon was preached by the Rev. S.M. Hartsock, pastor of Ryland M.E. Church. The ceremony was under the auspices of Kit Carson Post, No. 2, G.A.R., in which the deceased held membership. The association of the survivors of the 6th Army Corps, of which he was also a member, participated.</td>

*Farewell, dear mother, sweet thy rest;
Weary with years and worn with pain;
Farewell till in some happy place
We shall behold thy face again.
*Tis ours to miss thee all our years,
And tender memories of thee keep,
Shine in the Lord to rest, for so
He giveth His beloved sleep."

Through all pain at times she'd smile,
A smile of heavenly birth;
And when the angels called her home
She smiled farewell to earth.
Heaven retaineth now our treasure,
Earth the lonely casket keeps;
And the sunbeams love to linger
Where our sainted mother sleeps.

Mr. John G. Weaver

Mr. John G. Weaver, for nearly half a century a resident of this city, died at his late residence, 936 Florida avenue, at 7:50 p.m. yesterday after several months illness. Mr. Weaver was a native of Pennsylvania, and had reached his 72d year. He was married near Gettysburg, Pa., on September 17, 1840, and with his wife and four sons and a daughter, celebrated their golden wedding a little over a year ago. The couple arrived in this city March 5, 1845, coming over from Baltimore by stage, which was then running in opposition to the railroad at a low rate of fare. For some years he was in business on 7th street, and followed the cabinet makers' trade for a long series of years, engaged much of the time for the government departments. With his wife he united with St. Paul's Lutheran Church soon after his arrival, and for some years was superintendent of the Sunday school. He was initiated in Metropolis Lodge, No. 16, I.O.O.F., June 16, 1846 (a few months after its institution), and at the time of his death was its oldest member. He had been a member of Columbia Lodge, I.O.M., since July 1875, and in both orders he was a zealous worker. The funeral will take place from St. Paul's Church, 11th and H streets, at 3 o'clock tomorrow and he will be buried with rites of the above lodges at Congressional cemetery.

Death of Mrs. Weaver
Fatal Effects From Inhalation of Gas Several Weeks Ago
Mrs. Lydia Weaver, eighty years old, who resided at 936 Florida avenue northwest, died yesterday at her home from the effects of gas which she inhaled on the night of Tuesday, October 16. About 8 o'clock on the morning of October 17 Millard J. Weaver, with whom the deceased lived, noticed that neither his mother nor a maid named Edna Bond, who slept in the same apartment, had left the room they occupied together. He went upstairs to arouse them. On entering the apartment he was nearly overcome by a strong odor of gas. Investigation disclosed that the gas jet was partially turned on. After turning the jet off and opening the door and windows, Mr. Weaver hurried to the eighth precinct station and summoned assistance. In a few minutes the police patrol was at the house, and shortly afterward both women were taken to the Garfield Hospital.

Edna Bond soon recovered consciousness and was able to leave the institution. Mrs. Weaver was in a more serious condition, and did not recover consciousness for hours. The physicians at the hospital did not expect her to die, however.

Dr. Clarence A. Weaver, a grandson of the deceased, was notified of his grandmother's condition, and took charge of the case. Mrs. Weaver's extreme age was against her recovery, and a week ago Dr. Weaver decided that it was best to remove Mrs. Weaver to her home, where she might be with her relatives and friends. She was conveyed to the residence at 936 Florida avenue. Mrs. Weaver sank steadily until yesterday, when she died.

The deceased was the widow of John G. Weaver. Among the relatives surviving her in Washington are Millard J. Weaver, Hanson E. Weaver, Mrs. James L. Suman and Edward T. Weaver.

It is thought that while the room in which Mrs. Weaver and the maid slept was being dusted the key of the gas jet was accidentally moved by the dust brush. The leak was so small that it was unnoticed by the two women when they retired for the night, but with the door and windows closed there was no chance for the gas to escape from the apartment, and, as a result, the occupants inhaled it while they slept.

The funeral services will take place tomorrow at 2 p.m. from St. Paul's Lutheran Church, 11th and H streets, and will be conducted by the Rev. Frederick Moot, the pastor, assisted by Dr. S. Domer and Dr. J.G. Butler of the Memorial Lutheran Church. Mrs. Weaver had been a member of St. Paul's since March 5, 1845.

Death by Drowning
Yesterday morning, between 7 and 8 o'clock, the body of a white man was found in the Washington canal, near Third street and the Botanical Garden. The corpse was thought at first to be that of a respectable citizen of Washington living on the Island, but the appearance of that citizen, soon after the drowned person was found, among the spectators of the melancholy scene, led to a closer examination of the corpse. It was then ascertained to be that of Mr. Charles Webb, an actor, who was announced in yesterday's paper to have performed the part of Iago last night at the National Theatre. An inquest having been held before Coroner Woodward, the jury, after hearing the testimony, returned a verdict that the deceased, was drowned by accidentally falling into the canal, while he was in a state of mental aberration, brought on by intemperance.

Death of Mrs. Webb
A Well-Known Washington Resident Passes Away at the Seashore.
Mrs. Lizzie Beall Webb, daughter of the late Benjamin and Susan A. Beall of this city, died Monday night at her cottage at Deal Beach, N.J., after an illness which has extended over the past three months. The remains, accompanied by her brother, Mr. Clarence Beall, and other relatives, were brought to this city last night, and the funeral, which will, however, be a private one, will take place from her late residence, 1415 K street, tomorrow.

Mrs. Webb had a wide circle of friends in this city, who deeply mourn her death. Gifted with every charm of manner which made her so greatly admired in society, of which she has been a conspicuous figure, her intimate friends recognized in her the solid worth which formed a character combining both the gentler and forcible traits. Her charities and good deeds were continuous but in a large measure unknown to any but the recipients. She was a devoted member of St. John's Church.

'Ned' Weedon Ends Life With Bullet
Well-Known Retired Detective, 80, Commits Suicide in Home

Richard E. (Ned) Weedon, 80-year-old retired detective sergeant, ended his life yesterday by firing a bullet into his right temple with is service revolver.

Two nieces, Mrs. Margaret Jones and Mrs. Anna M. Jones, with whom he lived at 37 Rhode Island avenue N.W., rushed into his second floor bedroom after hearing a shot to find him lying on the floor, the .38-caliber gun still clutched in his hand.

A doctor who came with an ambulance from Casualty Hospital pronounced him dead, and Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald issued a certificate of suicide.

The octogenarian left a farewell note which read:

"Happy New Year. Good-by."

Police were told Mr. Weedon had been undergoing treatment for several years for a heart ailment and had threatened suicide.

Mr. Weedon was retired in 1921 after serving in the Metropolitan Police Department 37 years, 29 of which he spent as a detective sergeant.
His record shows numerous occasions when he was commended and rewarded for bravery in the capturing of dangerous offenders. In 1910, he succeeded in capturing a bandit wanted in connection with a $15,000 jewel robbery.

He became a policeman in July, 1884, was made a precinct detective in 1892, and advanced to detective sergeant in 1901.

Last Lincoln Murder Suspect Passes Away

Amanda Weeks, Arrested in Mrs. Surratt's Home at Time of Shooting, Is Dead

Mrs. Amanda Weeks, the last survivor of those taken prisoner at the time of the assassination of Lincoln and charged with being implicated in the plot, died yesterday at her home at 233 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, where she had lived during the last thirty-five years. She was in the ninetieth year of her age, had been married three times, and leaves two survivors, her son, James H. Houston of this city, employed at the Capitol, and her third husband, who is an inmate of a soldiers' home.

At the time of the arrest of Mrs. Surratt, Mrs. Weeks, then Mrs. Graham, was at the Surratt house. She was on her way home when she stopped to pay Mrs. Surratt, whom she knew well, a visit. While she was there, the announcement came that Lincoln had been shot and the officers surrounded the house. When they came in, Mrs. Weeks remarked that "Lincoln should have been shot long before." Promptly the officers took Mrs. Weeks with the rest and confined her in the old Capitol prison.

The prison physician, a southern man, recognized Mrs. Weeks as soon as she was brought in with the rest. Knowing that she could have had nothing to do with the affair, he told the facts before the officials and after ten days she was released. Had it not been for the prison physician's recognition, said her son this morning, it would be hard to tell what would have happened to her.

Funeral services will be held tomorrow at Lee's chapel, and the interment will be at Congressional cemetery alongside the grave of her second husband, French Graham.

Mrs Weeks' Arrest

Due to a Merely Casual Remark Her Son Explains

To the Editor of The Star

As the son of the late Mrs. Amanda Graham Weeks, I wish to correct the statement in Wednesday's Star regarding her confinement in the Old Capitol prison, especially the head line, which was so damaging to her. All her old friends at that exciting time of Lincoln's assassination have died and she had since lived all these years at her home, 223 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, and was well known as a person of goodness and kindness to all with whom she came in contact, and should not be so misrepresented at her death.

She was not, as stated, visiting at the home of Mrs. Surratt, not even being then acquainted with her. She met Mrs. Surratt while in the prison, which was three days and not ten as published. Her confinement in the prison was the result of a casual remark made in regard to the President having attended the theater on so sacred a day as Good Friday, and not through any knowledge of the circumstances or acquaintance with any one connected with the crime. Her statement, which was the cause of her arrest, was: "Had he not been at the theater on a Good Friday night he would not have been assassinated." This remark was overheard and she was held like many others until satisfactory explanation was given.

Obituary Honors

At a meeting of the Students of the National Medical College, held on 23d instant, Mr. G.W. Kimberly was called to the Chair, and Mr. Eusenius Lee Jones appointed Secretary.

Messrs. Young, Lovejoy, and Butt were appointed by the Chair as a committee to draught resolutions expressive of the feelings of the meeting. They submitted the following preamble and resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

Whereas it has pleased Divine Providence, in his wisdom, suddenly to take from our midst, Charles W.H. Weightman, a young man of moral and general worth, and a highly esteemed and respected fellow student—one who possessed, in an eminent degree, all those qualities which characterize the man and the Christian:

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with his afflicted family in their sad bereavement.
Resolved, That we attend in a body his funeral, from his late residence.
Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, we wear the usual badge of mourning for the space of thirty days.
Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the family of the deceased, and that they be published in the National Intelligencer and Union.

G.W. Kimberly, Chairman.
Eusedinus Lee Jones, Secretary

The death of Mr. Weightman was announced to his surviving fellow-students by Professor W.P. Johnston, in the following terms:

Gentlemen; It becomes my painful duty to announce to you that one of your number, while busily engaged in the study of his profession, has been suddenly, and with but a moment's warning, hurried, from life's active stage into eternity. On Saturday evening, about half-past six o'clock, Charles W. H. Weightman, after a few days' indisposition, suddenly expired. He had been attacked with mumps, which promised, as is usually the case, to prove a slight affection; but on Thursday fever commenced, and on Friday the swelling of the face and neck disappeared. During the night of Friday he was restless and wakeful, and on the following morning, after a convulsion, we found him laboring under symptoms of disease of the base of the brain. His intellectual faculties continued unimpaired, and during the day he talked much, greeting his friends with a smile as they arrived, suffering apparently no pain. About 5 o'clock I found him tremulous, and with some difficulty of articulation. He rapidly sank and died at the hour mentioned, having passed quietly, and without suffering, to the dread and mysterious eternity that awaits us all.

As your departed classmate was for a long time a private pupil in my office, I may be excused for dwelling a moment upon his many virtues. I do not wish, gentlemen, to draw upon my imagination; I desire only to do justice to the dead, and to speak of him as he was, and in the same terms that were used in speaking of him while he lived. Most amiable in his disposition, he was ever kind and friendly to all, an enemy to none; his generosity was without selfishness, his friendship disinterested. His morality was of that sound and exalted character that made him appear not even to know what were the foibles and vices of youth. His deportment, therefore, was at all times unexceptionable, and his conduct and conversation betokened a simplicity and ingenuousness rarely met with in one of his age. But the fountain from which emanated all his virtues, and that gave the peculiar tone to his character and conduct, was his exemplary piety. A professor of religion, he not only asserted to the truths of the Gospel, but lived a consistent Christian life, an humble and faithful follower of Christ, scrupulous in the performance of his duties to his God and to his fellow man. When we see how happy our young friend lived, content with the present, at peace with all, and looking for happiness where alone true happiness can be found, must we not envy his peaceful life, his death, without a physical or a moral pang, his sure reward in another and a better world.
To class the deceased among the most correct of young men would be doing him an injustice, for I feel constrained to acknowledge that I have never seen one more anxious to do right, or more scrupulous in avoiding to do wrong.

The sudden death which has just occurred must remind us all of the slight and uncertain tenure by which man holds his life.

While happy and busy in the pursuits of business and of pleasure, hoping for greater enjoyments in the future, a gentle zephyr comes stealing along, fragrant with the perfume of the summer flowers which it has gathered in its course, but it also wafts the subtle and deadly malaria; man inhales it with delight, the sickens and dies.

A disease, apparently of little consequence arrests one in his busy walk; he stops; repose, as he hopes, for a moment; builds his airy castles in the future, and suddenly Death has seized him in his chilly grasp. "In the midst of life we are in death." Vigorous youth is no more respected than decrepit age or feeble and helpless infancy. Death comes alike to all.

The circumstances under which we have met must bring this truth vividly to the minds of us all. Let us treasure the lesson it inculcates; and if we profit by the bright example of him to whose memory we have felt it a duty to pay this slight and passing tribute, we shall endeavor so to live that we may be, like him, prepared to die.

The National Intelligencer, February 10, 1849

Obituary

The death of Mr. Daniel S. Weightman, of Washington, has made a void in the circle of his young acquaintances and friends which cannot easily be filled. Amiable in every situation, generous to a fault, scrupulous in regard to any act which might serve to compromise his character as a gentleman, he was by all who knew him beloved as a companion. He was a member of the present senior class at Nassau Hall, Princeton, and bade fair to graduate in June with honor to himself and friends, and with prospects of usefulness and distinction before him. This his classmates at college this wonderful dispensation of God will come with afflicting force; but, if they will recur to scenes enjoyed and hours passed in the company of their late friend, they will behold no act performed by him, no work accomplished, and no duty done which was not executed with gentlemanly propriety. He was a noble soul, and they may never look upon a nobler; but they will cherish the hours spent in his company as pleasant memories of other days. There are many who pass away from among us who leave dear friends behind them; but this affliction conveys greater intensity of sorrow to our hearts when we reflect upon the suddenness of the bereavement. Truly--

"None knew him but to love him,
None named him but to praise."

Peace to thy ashes, dear departed friend! That the sod be green above thy grave, and thy sleep be sweet and pleasant, is the prayer of him who offers this full tribute of affection to thy memory!

Serious Illness of General R.C. Weightman
General Roger C. Weightman, one of our oldest and most estimable citizens, is lying at the point of death at his residence on 20th street, between G and H. General Weightman has been in feeble health for the past year or two but was not compelled to go to his bed until last Tuesday, and since then he has been rapidly sinking. His attending physician, Dr. Maxwell, of the navy, is of the opinion that he cannot survive much longer, although he has no settled disease, but is gradually sinking under old age and feebleness. His youngest daughter and a sister-in-law and several of his grandchildren are now with him. His only son is at Centreville, Louisiana, and one resides in Baltimore, both of whom have been summoned to his bedside.

Gen. Weightman was born in Alexandria, Va., in January, 1785, and is, therefore, in his 88th year. He came to this city in 1801 when quite a boy with Mr. Duane who published a paper here at the time, and he served his time as a printer of that journal. Following this business for some years he was finally elected public printer, and held that position several years. In early life he was quite successful in business and accumulated some money with which he erected a row of stores on the site now occupied by the National Hotel. In 1830 he was elected mayor of Washington and was re-elected to that position two or three times. Subsequently he was cashier of the Bank of Washington, and in 1851 he was appointed chief clerk of the Patent Office by Commissioner Ewbank. He remained in this position several years, when he was removed by Mr. Ewbank's successor and appointed a second-class clerk in the Patent Office. He continued in that position, doing duty in the library of the Patent Office, until June, 1870, when he was removed by Commissioner Fisher on account of his old age. In 1861 General Weightman was commissioned Brevet Major General of the Militia of the District of Columbia by President Lincoln and reorganized the militia here at that time. In 1812 he was in the battle of Bladensburg, and acted with much bravery on that occasion.

His wife, who died some years ago, was the youngest daughter of Col. Samuel Hanson, of this city. Although Gen. Weightman accumulated some property, his generous disposition soon disposed of it, and of late years he has depended upon his labor entirely. After he was removed from the Patent Office, Mr. A.R. Shepherd, vice-president of the board of public works, generously tendered him a position in his office, which Gen. Weightman has since filled with entire satisfaction to the board. No name stands higher in this community than Roger C. Weightman. Nearly all of his early associates have passed away, but none have left a purer record than that of Gen. Weightman.

It is to be hoped that his useful life may be spared despite his serious illness at his advanced age.

Death of Gen. Roger C. Weightman

We regret to announce that Gen'l Roger C. Weightman, one of the oldest residents of the District of Columbia, died this morning, at his residence on 20th street, near G, at the ripe age of 89 years, having observed his last birthday on the 18th of last month. General Weightman was a native of Alexandria, Va., but came here in 1801, where he learned the printing business with Andrew Way, who subsequently carried on business with the late Jacob Gideon, under the firm name of Way & Gideon. Gen. Weightman afterwards was the foreman for W.J. Duane, the Congressional printer, for several years, having his office near the corner of 6th street and Pennsylvania avenue. Gen. Weightman succeeded Duane as Congressional printer, and established an office on the south side of E street, near 7th, and held the position for one or two terms of Congress. During the war of 1812 he was an officer of a cavalry company, and at the close he accepted a commission in the militia of the District of Columbia, and at the time of Lafayette's visit to this country was a brigadier general. He held a commission as such until the death of Gen. Walter Jones, major general commanding, when he succeeded him in that position. During the early days of the rebellion, although his health would not permit him to participate in active out-door service, he performed the duties of the office of commander-in-chief of the District militia his headquarters being at the time in the Patent Office building. The orders calling for troops for mustering in, etc., were issued from there as also commissions for the officers. Col. Charles P. Stone, then of the U.S.A., and now commanding the forces of the Khedive of Egypt, was the inspector general and doing the out-door duty. When the death of Samuel N. Smallwood, mayor of Washington, occurred, in 1824, Gen. Weightman was elected by the city councils to that position, and filled the same from October 1824, to August 1827, being elected by the people in June, 1826; and with such fidelity did he perform the duties of the office that for years afterwards his administration was referred to as a model one. He was succeeded by Mr. Gales. On the 31st of July, 1827, he resigned the mayoralty, having been elected cashier of the Bank of Washington, then located in the National Hotel building, and he filled that position until 1834, when he resigned on account of ill health. Subsequently he was appointed to a clerkship in the Patent Office, and for a long series of years was the librarian there. He had an unsullied reputation, and possessed many traits of character, which ennoble the possessor. His death will be lamented by our older citizens generally. For a number of years past he has been quite infirm, and consequently many of the younger members of the community knew him only by reputation.

The Funeral of Gen. Weightman -- The following letter was to-day addressed by the District Commissioners to Col. Webster, adjutant general of the D.C. militia:

"The funeral of the late Roger C. Weightman, the Commissioners are informed, will take place on Sunday next under the auspices of the Masonic societies of the city. General Weightman was major general of the District militia, and at one time mayor of the city; he was also an officer in the last war with Great Britain, and for many years an influential, prominent and active citizen. It would, therefore, seem to be a proper occasion for a military display as a mark of respect, and the Commissioners refer the subject to you for such decision and action as you shall consider advisable and proper in the premises.

Very respectfully,
Wm. Tindall, Secretary"

Col. Webster issued the following order in compliance with the above letter:

General Orders No. 16 -- The companies composing the 1st Regiment N.G.D.C.M., are hereby ordered to attend as an escort at the funeral of the late Major General Roger C. The Evening Star, February 7, 1876

The Funeral of the late Roger C. Weightman took place from Masonic Temple yesterday afternoon, and a large concourse of people was in attendance. About noon Mr. Anthony Buchly, the undertaker, removed the remains from the late residence of the deceased, on 20th street, to the Masonic Hall. The body was in a handsome walnut coffin, covered with black cloth, with black bar handles and black Masonic emblems. On the lid was a handsome silver plate with black border inscribed: "Roger C. Weightman, died February 2, 1876, aged 89 years." On the lid was the lambskin, and two elegant crosses composed of the choicest exotics. About 2:45 o'clock the Masonic fraternity entered the hall in the following order: -- Washington Commandery, No. 1, Knights Templare, Rob't Boyd, Eminent Commander; Columbia Commandery, No. 2, James E. Waugh, Eminent Commander; Lebanon Lodge, No. 7, entered the hall and opened ranks, when the Grand Lodge with the Master Masons, followed by the Grand Master of the District and the officers of the Grand Lodge entered and passed through the ranks. After the Masons had been seated, the coffin, preceded by Rev. Mr. Jackson, of St. Paul's P.E. church, was removed up the center aisle to the end of the hall by the following pall-bearers: Past Grand Masters Charles F. Stansbury and J.E.F. At the conclusion of the services at the hall, the remains were born to the hearse, and the cortege moved to the Congressional cemetery, where the body was deposited in the vault. After the church services before the vault, Most Worshipful Grand Master, Isaac L. Johnson conducted the Masonic ceremony for the burial of the dead in his usual solemn and impressive manner, and at the conclusion a salute was fired by the military. The members of the Commanderies and of the Oldest Inhabitants' association contemplated following the remains to the cemetery in a body, but the rain compelled them to disband; however, many of them attended in carriages. There were many of the oldest citizens present, among them General P.F. Bacon, General G. C. Thomas, ex-Governor Shepherd, T.L. Hume, H.N. Easby, and the staff of the National Guard of the District was represented by Colonel Amos Webster, Colonel Joseph D. Barnes and Colonel J.V.N. Vandenberg.

Double Tragedy

Fred Weil Shoots His Mistress and Kills Himself

Promising Life Thrown Away

Jealousy and Crime in a Division Dive

Died Instantly

House No. 309 13th street, in the "Division," was the scene of a double tragedy last evening about 8 o'clock, the crime resulting from the imagined unfaithfulness of a negress, who is the inmate of the alleged disreputable house known as "Mahogany Hall." The man whose jealousy was aroused by this colored girl was a marine whose name is Frederick Weil. This poor man was born in Russia, coming here from St. Petersburg a number of years ago. In 1889 he enlisted in the United States navy and was sent here from Mare Island yard in California. Two months ago his five-years' enlistment expired, and he received $300 due him and re-enlisted. The colored girl who figured in the love affair is known in the "Division" as "Annie Grandy," although her real name is said to be Melton. She had lived at a place called Hertford, in North Carolina, and had friends in Richmond. She had also lived in Fall River and Boston. Annie is only about twenty years old. She is good-looking, and is fairly well educated. She lived here in respectable circles some months before she got in bad company and went to live in a handsomely furnished house, where she could dress well and figure in the midnight orgies, which are characteristic of such places. In this house she probably felt that she would be free from arrest and incarceration, and that although the law was being continually violated she would have police protection, as well as similar places in New York, no matter whether it was paid protection or whether it was the result of the police overlooking the violation of law, for it is only once in a long time that these places are raided and the disreputable inmates disturbed.

He Loved Her

Here in this elegantly furnished house this damsel met Fred. Weil, and the poor man actually fell in love with her. He told her that he was a clerk and spent enough money among the colored inmates to make them believe that he had told the truth. This was calculated to make such a woman love any one, and she loved him in this way for the money she could get out of him. Weil's money was spent recklessly, and now his $300 is about gone and he is dead. His love for the woman became so great that he found himself going lower each day, and when he realized that he was so deeply in her power that he could not tear himself away he asked the naval authorities to transfer him to some distant station. To add to all this trouble he soon became convinced that the girl loved another marine, one of his companions, and this only added fuel to the flames and made the Russian desperate. He had squandered his money on her, and had told her the truth of his station in life, and then for her to divide her affections with another marine was more than he could bear.

Double Tragedy

Being satisfied that Annie was receiving the attentions of the other marine and seeing no prospect of being sent away in the near future Frederick Weil determined that he would send her to eternity and then he would follow her. He made the effort with a pistol, but he was first to leave this world. Last evening was the time he selected to commit the double tragedy. Early in the evening he went to the "Division," expecting to meet his rival. It was about 8 o'clock when he saw the front door of the house open and the other marine walk out. He said nothing to his soldier friend, made no attempt to injure him, but walked directly to the house and was soon in the room of the woman who was the cause of his downfall. Here he remained a few minutes and in this short while he called her attention to the fact of her being untrue to him.

Annie wanted to explain, but Fred. had no time to listen to explanations, and when the woman's back was toward him he drew his revolver and shot her in the head near the base of the brain. The shock was so great that she fell to the floor and the marine, satisfied that he had accomplished this part of his murderous mission, put the barrel of the weapon to his mouth and pulled the trigger. The weapon did its work.

Women in the house were attracted to the room by hearing the pistol shots, and when the door had been broken open they saw the forms of the two wounded ones on the floor. The man was about dead and the woman, attempting to get up, anxiously inquired, "Do you think I'll die?"

The police were on hand soon after the shooting and sent the man's body to the morgue. The woman was sent to the Emergency Hospital.

She May Recover

The Grandy woman, who was shot last night by Marine Weil, who afterward committed suicide, may recover. The physicians at the Emergency Hospital said at 2:30 this afternoon, that the patient had rested very easily all day, and, though they cannot now form any certain judgment, they think she may get well.

Coroner's Inquest
Coroner Hamnett held an inquest this afternoon over the body of the dead marine and the jury heard the testimony of several witnesses who told of the circumstances connected with the double tragedy. The jury rendered a verdict that Weil came to his death by his own hands. The body was turned over to the officers of the marine barracks for burial.

<td>The Evening Star, December 5, 1866 Recovery of the Body of Mr. James Welch. Yesterday afternoon, the body of Mr. James Welch, of Lafayette Lodge of Masons, and Columbia Commandery, Knights Templar, of this city, was found in the slip at the foot of Gay street, in Baltimore. The fact of his disappearance on the evening on the 20th ult. from the Front street Theater, Baltimore, where a banquet was given to the visiting Masons on the occasion of laying the corner stone of the new temple, was noticed first in the Star, and a few days after the return of the Masons the members of his lodge and commandery took measures to make a thorough search for him. King David's Lodge of Baltimore took the matter in hand, and at the suggestion of members of Lafayette Lodge, Master C. Tickner employed parties to drag the docks for the body. The new Police Commissioners, (Messrs. Young and Valiant) Marshal Carmichael, and the police generally, and detectives Houck and Wallis, of that city, as also some of our detectives, seconded the efforts of the fraternity to ferret out the matter. As soon as opportunity offered, Mr. N.D. Larner, W. Master of Lafayette Lodge of this city, despatched Mr. J.A.W. Clarvoe to Baltimore to cooperate with Mr. Davis, a friend and roommate of the deceased, in searching for the remains. Men were employed at $3 per day to dredge the basin and docks, with an additional reward of $50 for the recovery of the body. Yesterday, as above stated, the body was found, it having nothing on but a grey undershirt. Except the face being slightly discolored, the body appeared to have been in the water but a few days. Mr. N.D. Larner, W.M., and Messrs. McGroffy, Andrews, Fuller and Flowers, of Lafayette Lodge, were in Baltimore, and were taken in charge by the members of the order, who turned over the remains to them. An inquest was held by Coroner Sparklin, and a verdict of accidental drowning rendered. Dr. Stevenson made a post mortem examination last night, but elicited no new facts. Notwithstanding the verdict, there appears to be something mysterious connected with this death, and the police of Baltimore will doubtless do everything to clear it up. The remains were brought to the city this morning, and taken to Mr. Buchly's establishment. The members of the order meet tonight to make arrangements for the funeral tomorrow. The deceased was only twenty-three years of age, and came out here during the war with a Pennsylvania regiment. He was wounded at Antietam, and was subsequently appointed to a clerkship in the War Department.</td>

John Welch Dies; Long At Capitol

As Chief of Architect's Office Disbursed Over $25,000,000

John Welch, 57, chief clerk and accountant in the architect's office of the Capitol, and who had been employed at the Capitol in various capacities more than 40 years, died at his late residence, 1303 Euclid street, Saturday, after a short illness.

Funeral services were conducted at the residence this afternoon. Rev. Charles E. Fultz officiated. Interment was in Congressional Cemetery, pallbearers were composed of employees of the architect's office.

Mr. Welch was prominent in the Masonic fraternity, being a member of Hope Lodge, No. 20, F.A.A.M.; Columbia Chapter, No. 1, Royal Arch Masons; Columbia Commandery, No. 2, Knights Templar, and Almas Temple of the Mystic Shrine.

Mr. Welch was, by law, acting architect whenever the architect was absent or disabled. He began work at the Capitol, December 15, 1884. For a time he managed the House restaurant and then was employed temporarily to organize a supply depot and arrange the financial affairs of the office of the architect.

He took the latter position as a sort of a vacation and has been at it ever since. Every dollar of the appropriations for that office since 1900 has been under his supervision. Upward of $25,000,000 has been spent without the loss of a single cent and without Mr. Welch being bonded.

Mr. Welch was considered an infallible authority on questions of precedent. As the Senate and House have divided authority and as there are a hundred or more branches of work that come under his office, questions are constantly arising as to who should do certain work and to what account it should be charged. Mr. Welch knew the relative responsibility and the relations of one job to another.

Born in Baltimore December 11, 1867, Mr. Welch moved to this city with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin T. Welch, when a boy. He is survived by his mother and father, his widow, Mrs. Alice Bright Welch, and a daughter, Mrs. Charles B. Handford, all of this city; three brothers, Ben T. Welch of Philadelphia, Harry S. Welch of this city, and Clarence F. Welch of Philadelphia, and three sisters, Mrs. Samuel W. Foster of New York, Mrs. Grace Buckler of Staten Island, and Miss Helen B. Welch of this city.

A Little Boy Drowned
Joseph Raymond Wells, a bright little boy not much more than six years of age, did not appear at his home Sunday, 516 1/2 11th street southwest, when the family sat down to dinner. His brother Clinton entered the dining room before the noonday meal was finished, and in a childish way told of having found Joseph's hat on the 11th street wharf. As nothing could be ascertained about the missing boy, William Thomas, an expert swimmer, went to the wharf and soon made a search of the river. In ten feet of water he found the body of the boy. The coroner gave a certificate of accidental death.

The Late Dr. Werner

Dr. Philip P. Werner, who died in this city Sunday, was a native of New York state. He was born in Albany county in 1821. His home was in the midst of the "anti-rent" troubles which harassed the farmers in that section for many years. Upon being graduated from the Castleton, Vt., Medical College, then one of the leading institutions of the country, Dr. Werner, with his newly-married wife--Nancy M. Schell--settled in Schoharie county, where he practiced medicine until he removed to this city, fifteen years ago. A severe affection of the eyes, making him blind for one and a half years, and from which he recovered, led him to make eye diseases a specialty, in which he was very successful. Besides his professional activity, Dr. Werner was a frequent contributor to various periodicals, and a zealous worker in religious circles. He was a man of unusual force of character, indomitable will and untiring activity. He leaves a widow and two children, Mrs. Raymond L. Ford of Washington, and Edgar S. Werner, the New York publisher.

A Brakeman Killed

A Tragical Ending of An Encounter Between Trainmen and Ruffians

Five men--Wesley Kidwell, Douglas Kidwell, Alfred Kidwell, Wm. Kidwell, and Albert Barrett--at work at Waterloo as employees of the National Press Brick Company, went to Alexandria yesterday and got on a spree. By 7 o'clock they were all intoxicated, and when they boarded the evening train for this city they were noisy and quarrelsome. The conductor, Harry Myers, did not want them to get on the train, but the men promised to be orderly, and they were allowed to enter the cars. They, however, became so noisy that the conductor had the train stopped, and with the assistance of the brakeman, George Wertenbaker, the baggage-master, Samuel Garnett, and the engineer, James Davis, the men were put off. They, however, attempted to prevent the trainmen from returning to the car, and in the struggle Davis was struck in the face with a brick, and Wertenbaker in the abdomen just below the sternum with a heavy stone, which, it is said, was thrown by William Kidwell. Wertenbaker sank to the ground with a groan, and the five men, frightened at what they had done, ran away. Wertenbaker was placed on the cars, but by the time the train reached the Long Bridge he was dead. The cause of death was internal hemorrhage. The struggle with the gang took place at St. Asaph's station, and from there the police authorities in Alexandria and this city were notified. By the prompt action of the police all the men were soon afterward arrested along the railroad, and were taken to Alexandria, where they were locked up. They are all young men. The three Kidwells are brothers.

The dead man, Wertenbaker, was but 22 years of age, and resided at 16 I street northeast with his parents. When his father was informed last evening of the death of his son, he fell to the floor in an unconscious condition, and the physician thought that he was in a precarious state from the shock to his nervous system.

The passengers on the train did not interfere in the affair, and it is stated offered no assistance to the trainmen.

The Death Occurred in Virginia

Coroner Patterson, of the District, was notified of the case and the following jury of inquest was summoned: Edward Burke, John Crogan, Patrick Cusick, Geo. H. Gill, Chas. Dietz, and R.E. Davis. It was stated that Wertenbaker had died in Virginia, and in order to establish that fact and settle the question of jurisdiction the coroner heard the evidence of two witnesses, as follows:

Robt. H. Kemp, a passenger, testified that Wertenbaker died on the train just south of the Long Bridge. Witness felt his heart and pulse and there was no respiration. His face had begun to discolor.

Harry J. Meyers, the conductor on the train, was of the opinion that Wertenbaker died in Virginia. His face had turned purple and he had ceased to breathe. Witness remarked that he was dead before the train arrived at the bridge.

The coroner decided that the Virginia authorities had jurisdiction in the case, and gave a certificate of death from a wound in the stomach. A number of witnesses had been summoned from Alexandria. The witnesses accompanied the remains on the 12 o'clock train to Alexandria, where the coroner's jury had been notified to assemble at 12:30.

The Inquest to be Held in Alexandria

The body of Wertenbaker arrived in Alexandria on the 12:04 train, on which he would have been on duty had he not been killed. Persons about the station in Alexandria said that the crew on the train are so overworked that toward the afternoon they are completely tired out and in no condition to defend themselves against ruffians who may attack them. They start in the morning at 6:05 o'clock and make eighteen single trips between Alexandria and Washington, the last trip ending about 10:30 o'clock, making a day's work of more than sixteen hours. The question arose whether Dr. Powell, the Alexandria city coroner, could hold an inquest or not. It was claimed that as the blow was inflicted and the death occurred in Alexandria county the inquest would have to be held by the county coroner, Dr. Birch, who lives near Arlington. It was finally decided by Mr. Marbury, the corporation attorney, that the inquest would have to be held by Coroner Birch, and a messenger was sent to Arlington after that official. Coroner Powell was found by a Star reporter after considerable delay, and he decided to hold the inquest in the city of Alexandria this afternoon. The body was taken to Wheatley's undertaking establishment.

The Prisoners Committed
The mayor of Alexandria this afternoon, without hearing the full case against the Kidwells and Barry, for the murder of the brakeman, Geo. Wertenbaker, committed them for a further hearing.

The Killing of Young Wertenbaker
Verdict of the Coroner's Jury in Alexandria--
The Accused Men Committed to Jail
The Kidwells and Barrett, who assaulted the railroad men and killed George Wertenbaker at St. Asaph Junction on Tuesday night, are now in jail in Alexandria, Va., and the body of Wertenbaker, taken there from this city yesterday for the inquest, has been returned to the residence of his father. Yesterday afternoon the coroner's jury, summoned by Coroner Powell, in Alexandria, and made up of J.H.D. Lunt, foreman; W.T. Herrick, Edgar Padgett, Frank L. Entwisle, Chas. Marshall, and Chas. Howell, met around the body, and in the presence of the Kidwells and Barrett, at Wheatley's morgue, on King, near Columbus street. The city coroner finding the body in his territory took jurisdiction, and after a post mortem had been made by Dr. O'Brien, the doctor testified to the jury that the death was caused by "shock," the force of the stone having demoralized the heart. S.J. Myer, the conductor, testified that one of the Kidwells was behaving badly, and he ordered Brakesman Garnett to put him off, and when Garnett did so at St. Asaph Junction the other four men got off and began stoneing the car. He saw Douglass Kidwell approach Geo. Wertenbaker, who was on the car step, and throw a large stone at him. The stone struck him near the heart, and he bent forward, then stepped back and fell in the door of the car. James Davis, the engineer, identified Douglas Kidwell as the man who threw the stone that struck Wertenbaker; and Samuel Garnett and John Werl testified that they saw the assault on the deceased, and that Douglas Kidwell was the man who threw the stone. They also testified that the men were in liquor, and had been disorderly on the train. R.H. Kemp testified to seeing the fight, and that Wertenbaker died before the train got out of Virginia. Messrs. Perry, Sullivan, Fisher, Allen, and Cheshire testified as to general circumstances connected with the assault. The jurors then returned a verdict that Wertenbaker came to his death from the effects of a blow from a brick or stone thrown by Douglas Kidwell, and that William, Alfred, and Wesley Kidwell and Albert Barrett were accessories to the crime.

The five men were then committed to jail. They will be tried for murder, Douglas Kidwell as principal and the others as accessories, at one of the terms of the court for the county at the old county court-house some time within the next few months. Commonwealth's Attorney James E. Clements will appear for the prosecution.

The Trail to Take Place in Alexandria
States Attorney Clement and States Attorney Marbury held a conference this morning as to the trial of the Kidwells and Barrett for the murder of Geo. Wertenbaker, and it was agreed that as the assault took place within the 1 mile around town, within which the city police authorities have jurisdiction, the case should be tried in the Corporation Court, Judge Meade. The indictment will probably be found next week.

Mrs. E.B. Wertenbaker Dead
Widow of Union Veteran and Native of Germany
Elizabeth B. Wertenbaker, widow of Woodward E. Wertenbaker, died this morning at 5 o'clock at her home, 663 F street northeast, death following an extended illness. Mrs. Wertenbaker was sixty-eight years old. Four sons, William Woodward Wertenbaker of Washington, Clark Ingersoll Wertenbaker, an army surgeon now stationed at Fort Gibbons, Alaska; LeRoy Francis Wertenbaker of New York and Paymaster Leon Norris Wertenbaker, U.S.N., survive her.

Mrs. Wertenbaker was born in Germany and came to this country with her parents at an early age. She came to Washington shortly before the outbreak of the Civil War and while here met Mr. Wertenbaker, then a sergeant in a Michigan volunteer regiment, which was stationed here, preparing to be sent to the front. When orders to go to the front arrived a wedding was decided on, and as the nearest official authorized to perform the ceremony happened to be a member of one of the high judicial benches in the District he was asked to perform the ceremony and did so.

Mrs. Wertenbaker remained in Washington during the war and soon after peace was declared Mr. Wertenbaker obtained employment with the federal government, later being transferred to the pension office. He died several years ago. Arrangements for the funeral of Mrs. Wertenbaker are delayed pending the arrival of members of the family from out of town.

Life Crushed Out

Workman at Steel Plant Caught in Machinery

The first fatal accident at the plant of the Firth-Stirling Steel Company, Giesboro, occurred this morning about 7:15 o'clock, the victim being Thomas Whalley, thirty years of age, who lived at 1218 Georgia avenue. He was caught in the machinery, his left arm ground to pieces and his skull crushed. Death occurred before he could be taken to the hospital upon the grounds and given treatment. The Anacostia police were notified of the accident and Acting Coroner Glazebrook was notified. William Schoneberger, superintendent of the morgue, went to the steel plant and brought the body to the city on a ferry boat.

Whalley, who was not married, left his home early this morning and went to the steel plant to go to work. His work was the running of one of the machines upon which the projectiles are finished, and I is the custom to have the projectiles in position in the morning when the men start upon their work. This morning when Whalley reached the plant he noticed there was no projectile on his machine. Without waiting to remove his overcoat Whalley went over to his machine and started it for the purpose of ascertaining if there was anything the matter with it.

As soon as he started the machine one of the bolts caught the left sleeve of his overcoat and dragged him forward. The machine was going so rapidly that Whalley was unable to pull away from it. He was pulled against the fast revolving machinery with such force that his arm was torn off and the side of his skull mashed and his life crushed out. Men who had entered the shop with him were unable to stop the machine until it was too late.

Acting Coroner Glazebrook made an investigation of the accident and decided that an inquest was not necessary. Relatives of Whalley were notified of his death and arrangements were made to have an undertaker prepare the body for burial. A brother of Whalley died in Mexico about two months ago.

Funeral of Thos. Whalley

Services a Church of Holy Comforter Tomorrow Morning

Thomas Whalley, the young man who was caught in the machinery at the steel plant yesterday morning and killed, as stated in yesterday's Star, was a native of Pittsburg, Pa. He came here with his parents when he was about ten years of age and had resided here ever since. His body was removed from the morgue yesterday to an undertaking establishment and prepared for burial and last night the body was removed to the late home of the deceased, 1218 Georgia avenue. Arrangements have been made for his funeral to take place tomorrow morning from the Church of he Holy Comforter and the interment will be in Congressional cemetery.

<td>There was another cable car accident yesterday afternoon that resulted in the death of one of Washington's oldest citizens, Mr. Robert S. Wharton. He was struck by a cable train near the corner of 6th street and Pennsylvania avenue about 3:30 o'clock and died at the Emergency Hospital several hours later.</td>

<td>Mr. Wharton, who was a boarder at the Howard House, was returning to his rooms on C street, when he crossed around behind a stationary train and was struck by number 13, which was going east. He was thrown several feet ahead of the grip and before it could be brought to a standstill it had passed over him and crushed him beneath the guards of the car.</td>

<tr>
<td>The injured man was at once picked up and carried into a neighboring drug store. There were few outward signs of injury, but it was evident he had been severely hurt internally, and when he had been removed to the Emergency Hospital, Dr. Hough saw that there was no hope for him. About four hours after the accident he died, the cause of death being concussion of the brain and injuries to the stomach and lungs.</td>

<td>Officers from the sixth precinct arrested the gripman, Howard Lindsay. The latter fainted when he realized what had happened and was prostrated with grief. Mr. Wharton was in his 83d year, and came to Washington from Nashville, Tenn., in 1839. He was appointed a clerk in the general Post Office by President Jackson. He remained in service man years, saving his money and investing it in real estate here, which eventually made him a wealthy man. It is estimated that he leaves real estate and other propert to the value of between $200,000 and $300,000.</td>

After the inquest the body was taken to the home of the dead man's stepson, F.W. Test, 223 E street. Mr. Test is one of the surviving injured of the Ford's Theater accident, and is now just fairly recovered from the accident.

<td>Yesterday afternoon Coroner Hammett held an inquest in the case of George H. Wheeler, the clerk to the yardmaster of the New Jersey avenue yard, who was killed on the surface tracks Monday night, as heretofore published in The Star. The deceased, whose family live on 9th street southwest, had been in the railroad company's employ for several years. He had been relieved from his work some time before he was struck by an engine and killed. When the affair happened the engine was backing from the depot to the yard; and the dead man's hat was found in the ash pan of the engine. During the taking of the testimony at the inquest it was stated that the tracks along Virginia avenue near the Half street crossing are lighted only by gaslight, and the coroner said he thought they were of enough importance to be lighted by electricity. No one saw the unfortunate man when he was struck by the engine, but a telegraph operator heard his groans soon after he was injured and left on the track. The taking of the testimony was begun at 1 o'clock, but was not concluded until after 8 o'clock, when the engineer and fireman returned from Philadelphia. There was no evidence of carelessness or negligence on the part of the railroad men, and a verdict of accidental death was rendered.</td>

Body In The River
Floating Corpse Found in the Potomac Near Great Falls
Identified As M.C. Wheeler
A Young Employe of the Smithsonian, Lately Despondent
Funeral Arrangements
The body of an unknown man found yesterday in the Potomac river about two miles below Great Falls was identified this morning as that of Maurice C. Wheeler, a son of A.M. Wheeler, an employe in the office of the Controller of the currency. The identification was made by the father of the boy, but the body was in such a bad state of decomposition that the father at first did not recognize the corpse. He, however, recognized the silver watch which was taken from the body of the drowned man, and on closer examination identified the shoes, stockings and pants which clothed the lower extremities of the floating object.

The young man left his home at 1313 6th street Monday morning, August 10, at 7 o'clock, since which time his friends have never seen him. He left his home with a bundle of laundry, and the last place he was known to enter was a branch laundry house on 7th street. He left this place at about 8 o'clock in the morning, and nothing more was known or heard of him until the identification of the body this morning. The father of the boy, who has been anxiously searching for his whereabouts since his disappearance, after reading the description of the body found at the Great Falls yesterday, felt quite certain it was that of his missing son. In company with a friend, he started out in a buggy this morning, only to find that his suspicions were verified, and the body that of his son.

Probably Temporary Insanity
Young Wheeler was no quite twenty-one years of age, and his father attributes his self-destruction to a temporary attack of insanity. Last September, a year ago, while engaged in sport, the boy was overcome by the heat, his mind being affected. He was confined to the Bloomingdale Asylum for a period of three months, since which time he has been living with his parents. Of late his actions were not unusual, and his parents were glad, thinking he was all right again. The family has been living at 1313 6th street up to a short time ago, when they moved out to Riverdale, Md. Young Wheeler was attached to the people who remained in the house, the family of Mrs. Hough, and he stayed with them.

A Farewell Note
Saturday, the 8th instant, young Wheeler called at the residence of Dr. J.T. Winter on 9th street. The next day Dr. Winter received the following message by special delivery mail:

"Dear Doctor: When this reaches you I shall in all events be resting beneath the water near a rock on the Virginia side of the river above the Aqueduct bridge.
"Yours, M.C. Wheeler."

A Postal Card
With the same mail Dr. Winter received a postal card, in which the writer stated that he was in an unfortunate frame of mind, and to please take no notice of the contents of the letter. Though Dr. Winter received these letters Sunday afternoon, he did not tell the father of the boy about their receipt until the following Friday.
Mr. A.M. Wheeler, the father of the boy is considerably incensed over the action of the physician, for had he received the letters immediately, he says, he could have prevented his son from leaving his home, as the boy did not leave until the next morning. He said that when he asked Dr. Winter why he had not been notified sooner, the physician replied that it was not in the line of his professional duty to do so. According to Mr. Wheeler, Dr. Winter acknowledged that the boy was not in his right mind when he called on him Saturday afternoon.

Other Notes

Monday morning Mr. Wheeler received the following postal card from his son:

"Papa, I have not much strength, you know, and I am not well. I am overcome.
Your son,      MORRIS"

A brother of the drowned boy, living at Indian Head, Md., received the following the same morning:

"Dear Artie:  Will you write to papa and Rosebud, telling them that it is all right with me, and not to bother.  If you do not want this bill, burn it."

Seemed to Change His Mind

In the same mail both parties received a postal card, which stated:  "In the same mail with this you will receive a letter which was written while I was in an unfortunate frame of mind; please take no notice of it."

Where the young man has been since his disappearance nobody knows, and no one can tell how he reached the place where his body was found.

Discovery of the Body

The body was discovered by Thomas Jackson of the Great Falls Hotel, and from its position it was evidently a clear case of suicide. The corpse was found floating between two rocks in the first eddy above what is known as "catfish hole," which is fully two miles from Great Falls, and at a point near the river directly opposite the Anglers' Club House. Mr. Jackson was hunting for a fishing spot at the time, and as soon as he found the body he notified Deputy Sheriff Wm. R. Embrey.

An Inquest

Shortly after 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon an inquest was held over the body by Justice of the Peace Luther M. Offutt.

The jury consisted of Ernest Wheatley, foreman; Harry Morgal, Arty Fisher, E.G. Fisher, Alexander Hill, Levi Hill, Thomas Bodine, James Bodine, Thomas Jackson, Val Collier, William T. Lynch and Richard Anderson. There was no evidence outside that of Thomas Jackson, who discovered the body, and a verdict of death by drowning was returned.

Body in a Bad State

The body was in a terrible state of decomposition, and had evidently been in the water for ten days or more. All of the flesh had disappeared from the head, leaving only the bare skull. The hands had entirely dropped off, leaving only the bones in the arm.

Means of Identification

The body was so badly discolored that it was hard to tell whether it was that of a white or colored man. When searched a silver watch, with the initials "M.C.W." engraved on it a night latch key and three car tickets were all that was found, and these were turned over to the father this morning. A package of cigarettes was also found in one of the pockets, though the father stated that the boy never smoked them.

For the Burial

A rough box was constructed by Mr. Bissett, and the Montgomery county officials were to have interred the body this morning had not the father appeared on the scene and claimed the body. Undertaker Wright was notified and he started out this afternoon for the Falls to secure the body.

On account of its condition it is probable that no time will be lost in making the interment, which will be made at Oak Hill cemetery. Morris Wheeler's disappearance was noted in The Star August 15. The young man had been absent from his boarding place since the previous Monday, and the matter became public when his father, who is an employee in the Treasury Department, received a letter, in which his son intimated that he intended to commit suicide.

Mr. Wheeler, sr., attributed the strange actions of his son to a temporary mental aberration. The boy had been subject to these attacks. Once before he was picked up at Cambridgeport, Mass., while his mind was wandering and his parents notified by telegraph. In hopes of effecting a cure he was sent to the Bloomingdale Asylum, where he remained a short time, though at the time of leaving the house three weeks ago young Wheeler appeared to be all right.

He boarded with a friend, 1313 6th street northwest, his family residing at present in Riverdale.

A Popular Young Man

Mr. Wheeler was employed under the Smithsonian Institution as a stenographer and typewriter and was thoroughly liked by all his associates and superiors. He possessed a bright mind, but was rather quiet and reserved in disposition. His habits were regular, and he took great care of his attire. Mr. Wheeler is generally believed to have taken his own life while in a state of temporary insanity. It is said that he had been irrational several times in the past, and two years ago he was overcome by the heat and narrowly escaped death. It is thought that the recent hot spell brought about a recurrence of his mental trouble, and that while suffering from it and in an irresponsible condition he wandered away from his home and business and destroyed himself.

Capt. Ambrose L. White and Rev. Henry Foxhall

They Were Sturdy Citizens and Zealous Patriots -- Some Reminiscences

At the foot of New Jersey avenue, south of the Capitol, stood a solid one-arched brick and stone bridge, spanning the canal, which I have good reason to remember from my earliest childhood in the thirties until its demolition by order of Gov. Shepherd, preliminary to filling up that death-trap and contagion-producer, the Washington canal. This bridge was as obstinate, sturdy and well built as its designer, Capt. Ambrose L. White, an Englishman.

Capt. White was my maternal grandfather. Many were his reminiscences, more interesting by far than any I can relate.

The old bridge successfully resisted all the men and weapons, pickaxes, spades and crowbars with which it was assailed. Dynamite cartridges were resorted to, and the explosions, which shook the foundations of the Capitol, brought down the bridge in a stifling cloud of smoke and dust. The old bridge died hard and bravely, but it was used to war. Had it not seen the victorious Hessians of King George mach down from the burning and looted White House and Capitol and cross over it, fired upon by the Americans in their triumphant retreat.

Capt. Ambrose L. White came from Lancashire, England, along with or shortly after the Rev. Henry Foxhall, a fellow countryman and brother Methodist. They became contractors and were both zealous Wesleyan Methodists. Foxhall was an all-around iron founder and molder. He had established a gun factory in Washington under a contract with the United States government. It was between the canal mule drive and the Potomac river, about 25th street west, near Georgetown. The building had been or was subsequently a glass manufactory, for often I remember being present there at the weird spectacle of glass blowing, a sight never likely to leave the mind's eye of marveling boyhood.

Foxhall and White obtained many contracts with our benevolent Uncle Sam. Mr. White built bridges over every gutter, gulley and watershed to which he could obtain access on lawful invitation.

During the connection of these two remarkable early citizens of Washington they found time and money to carry out, without bankrupting themselves, certain little fads and fancies of their own, which hurt nobody, if they did not perchance benefit, and from which they never wished or expected to derive the least return this side of the grave.

Henry Foxhall built and established the Foundry Methodist Church in obedience to a vow -- of response to his prayers that his foundry should be spared destruction by the British, who were invading Washington city.

Built a Chapel

Ambrose L. White, not to be behind him, joined forces with another good man, a printer, James C. Dunn, and gave half a square of ground in 9th street northwest and built thereon a beautiful Methodist church. These are the things which give us glory. Ambrose White's son John, who had a powerful and melodious voice, led a choir there for some years until he went to New York to live. Then Prof. Daniel took charge and his reputation grew and grew.

There were other just as good men who were linked with that endless chain of benevolence, charity and godliness which broke all other claims, as King George found out. It was the good men as well as the great men who saved the country.

Not more than a block or two above and nearer to the Capitol, on the northeast corner of New Jersey avenue, in a large inclosure of three-quarters of the square at least, Ambrose L. White had built his own simple yet spacious brick home, and here he resided until his death. Here his comrade of the battle of Bladensburg, who eventually won the heart of his first born and favorite child, was married to her.

Shortly after Ambrose L. White had established his home on this spot he reached his door flying from Gen. Ross and the red coats from the last feeble stand of the Americans at Bladensburg, and only entered it to emerge with his trusty rifle in hand and his undaunted, unconquered, patriot spirit within him to take a few parting shots at the triumphant, jeering enemy as they marched past his house on their way over the old bridge to next assail Baltimore.
Coolsly, deliberately as any minute man of the revolution, this old Cromwellian hero aimed, discharged and reloaded his trusty rifle and banged away again. A command was given and a force of men was detailed and the swamp fox was traced and hunted to his lair. He flung down his gun and knowing of a place of safety, the hounds soon lost all trace of him.

After prodding with their bayonets every suspected spot, the soldiers resumed the march, but not until they had set fire to the premises. White had been face downward in the narrow space beneath the bake ovens contrived for his family and numerous hands employed in his various enterprises.

There was a Methodist colony crystallizing in the new national capital these days James C. Dunn and Wm. H. Edes and Joseph Radcliffe and Rev. Dr. Gurley, Rev. Henry Slicer, Rev. Geo. G. Cookman, Rev. Dr. Justin, Ulysses Ward, Thomas Purcell, William Woodward and a host of well known and highly esteemed and honored names were one by one added to the list of enterprising citizens, who, in varying interests and industries, elevated and sustained their own fortunes and firmly established the new national capital.

But let us go back to the days of the old brick bridge and the burning and looting of Washington city. The President's house and the Intelligencer office were rifled and burning in the West End and two considerable fires were under full blast on New Jersey avenue southeast. One was the United States Capitol and the other the residence of Ambrose L. White.

Years passed on and White, approaching his 100th year, became totally blind. He enjoyed having read to him the columns of the National Intelligencer, his political bible, in which he most devoutly believed. The old man kept himself well posted.

Miss Earlene White, Women's Leader, Dies
Miss Earlene White, 76, president of Business and Professional Women from 1937 until 1939 and a champion of woman's progress in business, died last Friday at her home, 126 C street N.E., of a heart attack.
A native of Meridian, Miss., she was educated in Mississippi schools and began her business career there with a small job, on which she had said she learned a worthwhile lesson -- "to take undeserved blame right along with undeserved praise and not get too upset over one or too cock over the other."

Before coming to Washington in 1933, Miss White had been a bank clerk, business manager of a newspaper, promoter of the citrus fruit industry in the Rio Grande Valley of Texas and publisher of her own weekly newspaper. At one time she ran a publicity bureau through which she organized several campaigns for raising endowment funds for colleges in Mississippi.

Active as a Democrat

An active Democrat, she was appointed to the staff of the Senate post office in 1933. She served until 1947, and again from 1949 until 1954.

As president of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, Miss White traveled extensively, speaking on the role of American women in business and their place in the world of the time.

At the Third International Congress of Business and Professional Women in 1938 in Budapest, she noted that lack of technical training kept many women from holding top positions in business and the professions.

"Man has long dominated the world," she warned, "and woman, to have equal opportunities with men, must be twice as good."

She also said, before the District Women's Committee of the American Institute of Banking in 1939, "Women are not trying to compete with men," adding that "Furthermore, they do not wish to walk behind the, but beside them."

Urged Active Participation

She favored the test of "efficiency and ability" for women in elective and appointive offices "Women should be ready and willing," she had said, "to take their place in actual participation in local, State and national affairs."

After her retirement in 1954, Miss White devoted most of her time to helping the Children's Hospital, the Home for Incurables and the D.C. Village.

She leaves three nieces and two nephews.

A memorial service for her is scheduled at 4 pm. Sunday at the S.H. Hines Funeral Home, 3901 Fourteenth street N.W. Burial will be private.

The family asks that expressions of sympathy be in the form of contributions to the Children's Hospital and the Foundation of the National Business and Professional Women's Clubs, 2012 Massachusetts avenue N.W.

Three shots were fired by the man who was crazed with liquor. One bullet made a hole through his wife's lung, while the last bullet entered his own brain and caused almost instant death. He was about forty years old and most of his acquaintances were persons best known in sporting circles, particularly those characterized as 'sluggers,' who engage in sparring contests and fights generally. For several years he was bartender at Rooney's saloon, and while employed there he was arrested on a charge of robbery, for which he served time in prison. Upon his return to this city he secured positions in various saloons and then he opened a place for himself on Pennsylvania avenue near the Capitol., where confidence men and bunco-steerers spent most of their time. On account of the bad character of the people who frequented this place he was forced to sell out and leave and he subsequently opened a place on Pennsylvania avenue between 12th and 13th streets. This place was no better than the first and, acting upon the recommendations of the police, the Commissioners refused him a license and he was finally forced out of the whisky business.

The Scene of the Shooting
From there he went to live at No. 462 N street, where he had fitted up the front room to open business shortly, and it was at this house that the double tragedy was enacted yesterday. Five years ago White married Miss Mary Siben. They had no children, but had adopted a boy who is about six years old. Before the affair happened White, his wife and adopted son and a friend named Thomas McNeal were sitting in a room on the second floor. About 5:15 o'clock the boy asked for a nickel with which to buy some peanuts. The boy went out and spent that amount of money which was given him by McNeal, and before he returned White suggested that McNeal go downstars and bring up some more liquid refreshments. This McNeal did, and when he ascended the steps he saw his friend White holding a revolver in his hand. He had evidently meant to kill McNeal, as well as the members of his own family, but as they were such good friends he said he would not kill him. Then he requested McNeal to go down stairs and get some glasses, which request he was complying with when the report of a pistol startled him. Mrs. White screamed, and following her outcry came another report.

Mrs. White Shot
McNeal, who was in the front room on the lower floor, hurried toward the stairway, when he met Mrs. White, who ran through the yard to the house of a colored woman named Belle Johnson.

"I'm shot!" she exclaimed.

The colored woman left Mrs. White on a sofa and hurried to the office fo Dr. William T. Gill and from there she went to the police station.

Sergeant McTaggart and several policemen hurried to the White residence and inquired for the would be murderer, but as no one had seen him leave the premises the officers concluded that he was still upstairs. The house was surrounded and Sergeant McTaggart, with pistol in hand, started to ascend the steps in search of White.

A Shot and a Fall
Before he had reached the upper landing he heard a pistol shot in the room above him and then there was a heavy fall. Not a sound followed the heavy fall, not even a groan, for the bullet from the weapon had struck a vital spot, as already stated, and had sent the miserable man into another world.

When Sergeant McTaggart entered the room he found White's body stretched upon the floor and beneath his head was the thirty-two caliber pistol that had done the deadly work.

An examination of the body revealed a bullet hole just above the left ear. The bullet had cleared the skull on the opposite side of his head and was found on the floor.

The Wounded Woman
In the meantime, Drs. Gill and English had reached the wounded woman and ascertained that the bullet had pierced her lung. She told the doctors that jealousy prompted her husband's rash act. On account of her condition the doctors advised her not to excite herself any more than she could help by talking, and after dressing the wound, they had her sent to Providence Hospital. Wile the wound is a serious and dangerous one the doctors do not consider it necessarily fatal and they think she may recover.

After the excitement had subsided the police learned that "Reddy" had been on a drunk for some days and he was on the verge of the delirium tremens. It was learned that only two or three days ago he attempted to kill his wife by shooting at her, but the bullet did not strike her.

This morning the injured woman was resting quietly and was doing as well as could be expected under the circumstances.
"Reddy" White's Funeral

The body of James H. White, alias "Reddy" White, who committed suicide Thursday evening after shooting his wife, as published in yesterday's Star, was removed to the home of his brother, No. 1006 14th street southeast, yesterday. Coroner Patterson gave a certificate of death from suicide and his funeral will take place tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock. The interment will be made in Congressional Cemetery.

Mrs. White is getting along nicely. She has almost recovered from the effects of the shock to her nervous system. She was visited yesterday by friends, to whom she gave directions regarding her husband's funeral. She will probably recover.

Aged Resident Dead

James Lawrence White, in His Ninety-First Year, Passes Away

James Lawrence White, for more than seventy-seven years a resident of this city, and a brother-in-law of Representative Gibson of Maryland, died shortly after 11 o'clock last evening at his residence, 206 D street northwest, in his ninety-first year. For six years Mr. White had been an invalid, and he had not left his bed for four years before he died. Until the end, however, he retained most of his faculties and also his remarkable evenness of temperament.

Mr. White came to this city from Virginia in his thirteenth year, having been born on the banks of the James river. In his day he was one of the best known of Washington's business men, having conducted a dry goods establishment before the civil war in partnership with his brother, the late William G.W. White, on the corner of Pennsylvania avenue and 7th street northwest, in the building known as the American Hotel. Since the war he lived a retired life, not engaging in any business pursuits.

There are not more than one or two residents of this city whose age exceeds that of Mr. White. He outlived all of his collateral kinfolks. He leaves a widow, his second wife, formerly Miss Gibson of Maryland, and four children -- Mrs. J.E. Gibson of this city, a daughter by his first wife, and two sons, W. Gibson White, now in England, and J. Lawrence White of Sharpsburg, Md.; also one daughter, Mrs. George W. Montgomery of Georgetown, the child of his second wife.

The funeral services will take place tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock at St. Mark's Episcopal Church, corner of 3d and A streets southeast, of which Mr. White was a member. The rector of the church, Rev. Dr. Devries, will conduct the services. The body will be placed in the family vault at Congressional cemetery.

Dr. W. Lee White Dead

Long-Time Resident of the District Passes Away
Succumbs to Illness
Attains the Advanced Age of Eighty-Eight Years
Veteran of the Civil War
Secures Prominence as Journalist, Physician, Banker and Farmer. Plans for the Funeral

Dr. W. Lee White, journalist, physician, banker and farmer, and a long-time and respected citizen of the District, died about 6 o'clock this morning at his home, Floral Hill, D.C. The cause of death was a complication of disorders incident to his advanced age. Dr. White was in the 88th year of his age, and had been ill since October 16 when he was seized by a chill while at his desk in the pension bureau. He was given first aid treatment in the emergency hospital of the bureau and then went to his home.

Dr. White was born near Louisville, Ky., in 1821. He was well acquainted with Henry Clay, and cast his first presidential ballot for him in 1844. For many years he was a neighbor and co-laborer with George D. Prentice, the journalist. When the civil war broke out, in 1861, Dr. White entered the Union army and served as surgeon of the 1st Kentucky Volunteers.

Possessed Many Friends

In the suburbs beyond the Eastern branch of the Potomac, where he resided so long, and, indeed, throughout the District of Columbia, he had many warm friends. His country place adjoining Randle Highlands, near the intersection of Minnesota and Pennsylvania avenues, has been subdivided and is known as Floral Hill. He had lived in the southeastern suburbs since 1875.
Dr. White was a member of the Association of Oldest Inhabitants of the District of Columbia and of the G.A.R. His long life was filled with activities. He had a wide acquaintance with public men. About 1886 he edited and published in this city a weekly newspaper, the National Free Press. Previously he had published the Counterfeit Detector, at Louisville, Ky., and in 1872, was the editor of the South Maryland Republican, published at Upper Marlboro, Md.

Interested in the District
Dr. White was a man of pleasing personality and possessed the happy faculty of making friends and "holding them by hoops of steel," as he was wont to say. He always manifested a keen interest in all matters tending toward the upbuilding of the District and made a study of local history. It was through his efforts that the dueling ground of the Graves-Cilley affair was located about 27 years ago. He escorted a cavalcade of vehicles containing many senators and representatives to the exact spot on which Cilley fell mortally wounded by his Kentucky adversary. Prior to that time the location of the dueling place had not been definitely known.

His first wife was Miss Jane Tompkins of Danville, Ky., who died in February, 1894. In 1895 he married again, his second wife being Mrs. Anna E. Stakes, widow of Judge Stakes of California. Besides Mrs. White, four sons survive him. They are R. Lee White and William Grant White of this city, John T. White of Pittsburg, Pa., and George W. White of San Francisco. At the time of his death Dr. White was a clerk in the pension bureau.

The remains have been removed from his home to the chapel of J. William Lee, 332 Pennsylvania avenue, where they may be viewed by his friends and where the funeral will take place.

Funeral of W.L. White
Remains Interred in the Family Vault in Congressional Cemetery
Funeral services for Dr. William Lee White, who died at his home at Floral Hill, D.C., Saturday, were held yesterday afternoon in the chapel of Lee's undertaking establishment. Rev. W.L. Lynn, pastor of the Bradburn Memorial Church and a lifelong friend of Dr. White, conducted the service.

Interment was made in the private family vault in Congressional cemetery. The pallbearers were William Fastnaught, R. Gannon, T.P. Whitney, R. DuBois, H. Buckley and Benjamin W. Reiss. Mr. Reiss represented the Oldest Inhabitants' Association, of which Dr. White was an active member. A delegation from the association attended in a body. Representatives of the G.A.R. also attended in honor of a departed comrade.

Dr. White was born in Louisville, Ky., in 1821, and after the war took up newspaper work in that city. Later he came to Washington and began the publication of a weekly newspaper called the National Free Press.

He leaves a wife and four sons. The sons are R. Lee White and William Grant White of this city, John T. White of Pittsburg and George W. White of San Francisco.

Dr. W.L. White to Celebrate
Will Attain Age of 86 Tomorrow
Exercises at the Floral Hill Homestead--Members of Oldest Inhabitants to Participate
Dr. William Lee White is to have a birthday anniversary tomorrow and scores of his friends in the District will unite with him in celebrating the event. There will be many members of the Oldest Inhabitants' Association participating and likewise many of the doctor's friends from the pension office, where he is employed, and from other branches of the government service. Floral Hill, the White homestead on the further shore of the Eastern branch, will blossom in earnest with the very excess of good feeling incident to the safe arrival of its owner at another milestone in the journey of life. Dr. White will attain the age of eighty-six years tomorrow.
For many years one of the leading citizens of the Capital city, Dr. White has been the moving spirit in many movements for civic improvements in the District. He is a native of Kentucky and a veteran of the civil war, having served throughout the great conflict as an army surgeon. In his home state and in Tennessee after the war Dr. White was identified with newspaper work, and he was also active in the political arena.

Ambitious for Reward

Ambitious for reward at the hands of his party, and especially optimistic because of a relationship by marriage with the then President of the united States, Ulysses S. Grant, Dr. White came to Washington in 1870 and bent all his energies to securing an appointment to some branch of the consular service. Early in the course of his stay in Washington, Dr. White received the tender of a post in the pension office, but at first he spurned it. And in telling the story yesterday he took keen delight in recounting the trials and tribulations of those other days, which finally led him to accept gladly the pension office place.

Except for one brief period in 1873, when a disagreement with the then commissioner of pensions led to his resignation, Dr. White has been connected with the pension office continuously since 1870.

Conducts Campaign Paper

In 1873, after his resignation, he went to Marlboro, Md., and conducted a "campaign paper" in the interest of the candidacy of S.T. Suit for the Prince George county seat in the state senate, and he surprised not only Mr. Suit but all the county round by stirring up such enthusiastic republican sentiment in that democratic stronghold that Mr. Suit was elected with votes upon votes to spare.

After the Marlboro campaign Dr. White returned to the pension office, and for years he held on co of the most important examinerships in that department. With four-score-and-six years to his credit Dr. William Lee White is mentally and physically alert as are many men of half his age, and his friends tomorrow may very properly congratulate him on the fact that he is "eighty-six years young."

| 'Tis hard to live and yet to feel
Whilst living you are dying;
To leave all loved ones here below,
This, this is very trying.

And is there anything that can save
Us from the arms of death?
Can no physician claim the power
To banish it forthwith?

Alas! no power on earth can heal,
Or save us from the grave
Our Father's will must be obeyed,
'Tis He alone can save.

And He will save all those that call
On Jesus Christ his Son
And through His all atoning blood
He'll pardon every one.

And if it is God's will on earth,
These blessings will be given;
And should He bid us come away,
He'll save us all in Heaven.

Now let us say "Thy will be done,"
No matter go or stay;
We'll meet again with those we love, |

Funeral of "Dannie" Whyte -- A Popular Southwest Boy Rests in Congressional Cemetery

Funeral services over the remains of Daniel Taylor Whyte, youngest son of Frederick and Eliza Whyte, were held last Tuesday at the family residence, 340 C street, southwest.

"Dannie," as he was affectionately called by his playmates, was one of the popular lads of the southwest section, as was attested by the many beautiful floral tributes sent by members of his Sunday school class and his public school friends.

Rev. Dr. Spooner, pastor of the Sixth Presbyterian Church, conducted the services. Interment was in Congressional cemetery.

Eliza (Bliss) Lithgow Taylor Whyte.

Bliss was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, on November 30, 1854, of parents unknown to us. The family immigrated to the US about January, 1855. There is no information about the family until she married Frederick William Whyte, Jr., on September 6, 1877. She was his 2nd wife.

I can remember visiting Bliss many times at her home. Even though she was totally blind in her later years, she always had a hug for me and told me to go and get a cookie from the jar in the kitchen. She would ask me to stand in front of her so she could see how I was dressed. Then Bliss would run her hand over my chest and tell me how nice I looked. Her spirits were great.

My family visited her one day in the late winter and found that she was sick. She was concerned that she would die before the snow melted and that the people who attended her funeral would get their feet wet and catch cold. Bliss passed away on April 20, 1940 and it was a beautiful day when she was buried at the Congressional cemetery. I was there.

Funeral of "Dannie" Whyte -- A Popular Southwest Boy Rests in Congressional Cemetery

Funeral services over the remains of Daniel Taylor Whyte, youngest son of Frederick and Eliza Whyte, were held last Tuesday at the family residence, 340 C street, southwest.

"Dannie," as he was affectionately called by his playmates, was one of the popular lads of the southwest section, as was attested by the many beautiful floral tributes sent by members of his Sunday school class and his public school friends.

Rev. Dr. Spooner, pastor of the Sixth Presbyterian Church, conducted the services. Interment was in Congressional cemetery.

From: Clifton A. Whyte, Jr., June 7, 2002 (step great grandson) Eliza (Bliss) Lithgow Taylor Whyte.

Bliss was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, on November 30, 1854, of parents unknown to us. The family immigrated to the US about January, 1855. There is no information about the family until she married Frederick William Whyte, Jr., on September 6, 1877. She was his 2nd wife.

I can remember visiting Bliss many times at her home. Even though she was totally blind in her later years, she always had a hug for me and told me to go and get a cookie from the jar in the kitchen. She would ask me to stand in front of her so she could see how I was dressed. Then Bliss would run her hand over my chest and tell me how nice I looked. Her spirits were great.

My family visited her one day in the late winter and found that she was sick. She was concerned that she would die before the snow melted and that the people who attended her funeral would get their feet wet and catch cold. Bliss passed away on April 20, 1940 and it was a beautiful day when she was buried at the Congressional cemetery. I was there.

An Excellent Appointment*

We learn that Mr. Frederic Whyte has received the appointment of Paymaster and Military Storekeeper at the Washington Arsenal.

Mr. Whyte is known as a most faithful and efficient officer, for a long series of years he having been in the Arsenal and in the Coast Survey service since 1843. During the war the very heavy and responsible duties of chief clerk at the Arsenal were performed by Mr. Whyte with a fidelity that elicited the warmest praise, and his promotion shows a commendable instance of appreciation of meritorious service.

<td>Another of those painful occurrences arising from the incautious handling of firearms, of which nevertheless numbers of unheeded warnings are continually happening, took place on Friday evening last, on the ferry-boat plying at the Long Bridge. As Mr. Charles G. Wilcox, a clerk in the Bureau of Subsistence, was returning from a shooting excursion, and in the act of paying his ferriage, his fowling piece exploded, the load taking effect on the upper part of his head, blowing off a portion of the cranium, and producing instant death. It is not known whether the hammer of the barrel which exploded was down upon the cap; it is thought not; but, under any circumstances, another lesson is added to the mournful series which teach the peril of allowing for a single instant the muzzle of a loaded gun to point in the direction of the person. A loaded gun to point in the direction of the person. A loaded gun carries death within itself, and that death is as ready for its owner as for any one else if ceaseless care be pretermitted. A weakness is apt to take possession of the mind long habituated to a favorite gun, as if it were some domestic pet, and a feeling is induced which begets a too-familiar and hence dangerous use of it. It should always be considered and handled with the utmost reasonable care, as if it were a thing of the most treacherous character.</td>

The Death of Benjamin F. Wilkins

Among the recent deaths none will cause deeper pain to the friends of the deceased than that of Benjamin F. Wilkins. After years of acute suffering, borne with manly fortitude and cheerfulness, he passed away on Friday last. Mr. Wilkins was a native of Portsmouth, Va., but had resided in this city some twenty-five years. By profession he was a printer, but abandoned the "case" for government service. He filled responsible positions in the Post Office department, and the organization of the money-order system was, to a large extent, his work. An unjust charge against him in connection with his official position, instigated, it was understood, by the notorious L.C. Baker, of "detective" memory, caused Mr. Wilkins much distress for a time, but in the end his character was fully vindicated, and he never for a moment lost the confidence of his friends. Mr. Wilkins was a writer of decided ability, and his style was distinguished by a playful humor that would have done no discredit to our professional humorous writers. He warmly appreciated by "Artemus Ward" (Brown), and the latter lectured in Washington under his auspices. Mr. Wilkins was for a time one of the proprietors of the Sunday Herald, but his health did not permit him to follow up journalism, a pursuit for which he was so admirably fitted. Some five years ago a paralytic stroke prostrated him, and before he had recovered a second and a third attack rendered him incapable of active physical exertion. A year ago, in this crippled condition, the hand of death deprived him of his almost sole support, his devoted wife. A week since a fourth stroke rendered him incapable of motion, and also affected his brain. In this condition he remained until the end.

Dr. A. George Wilkinson, 58 Years In Office, Dead
Recognized Dean of Corps

Dr. A. George Wilkinson, for fifty-eight years a member of the examining corps of the patent office, died at his residence, 1526 K street, Sunday evening. He had remained in the active service of the patent office until a month ago, and had long been known as dean of the corps, both in total length of service and in length of service as a principal examiner.

Dr. Wilkinson was born in Willimantic, Conn., February 22, 1834. He graduated from Yale University in his class of 1856, which also included ex-Senator Depew, the late Justices Brewer and Brown of the United States Supreme Court and other distinguished men, and was a member of Scroll and Key and of Delta Kappa Epsilon Fraternity. He received the degree of A.M. from Yale in 1859 and honorary A.M. from Columbian College the same year. From the latter institution (now George Washington University) he received in 1878 the honorary degree of Ph.D.

After graduating from Yale he studied in France and Germany, and in 1861 was appointed assistant professor of ancient languages and literatures at he State University of Missouri, at Columbia, Mo. In 1864, the university being closed on account of the civil war, he accepted an appointment in the United States patent office.

During the greater part of his service at the patent office Dr. Wilkinson had special charge of patents relating to dentistry and to artificial limbs and was recognized as an expert in these lines. During and since the recent war he gave particular attention to artificial legs and other appliances for the rehabilitation of our wounded soldiers, and was frequently called into consultation at Walter Reed Hospital and with other government officers in regard to this work.

Dr. Wilkinson was internationally known in patent work. At the Paris expositions of 1878, 1889 and 1900 he served as a member of the international jury of awards, and also in 1889 presided over the fourth section of the Paris International Patent Congress. In 1893 he was one of the patent office examiners chosen to have charge of the exhibit of that branch of the government at the world fair at Chicago. He was one of the secretaries of the international patent conference held in Washington, D.C., during May and June 1911.

Dr. Wilkinson joined the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church of Washington, in 1857, and retained his membership there during the rest of his life, ever active in the discharge of the church duties. January 26, 1865, he married Lue Burnam Wilson of Columbia, Mo., who survives him. He also leaves three children: Mrs. Howard L. Hodgkins and Miss Lucille W. Wilkinson of Washington and George L. Wilkinson of Chicago; six grandchildren and three great grandchildren.

Funeral services will be held tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock from his late residence, 1526 K street. Rev. Dr. Wallace Radcliffe and Rev. Dr. Henry Allen Tupper will officiate. Dr. Wilkinson's grandsons, Howard Wilkinson Hodgkins, George Wilson Hodgkins and Lawrence Wilkinson, and two of his associates in the patent office, Herbert Wright and William Hutchinson, will serve as pallbearers.

<td>A circumstance which occurred in Georgetown on Sunday evening last, resulting in the death of a child between two and three years of age, son of a Mrs. Williams, near the market, should deter any parent from leaving children alone in a room where they are accessible to fire. The lady first absented herself, giving leave to a servant to do the same, and when she returned, some time after, found the child lying upon the fire horribly burnt and dead. Persons in the neighborhood heard the screams of the child, but dreaming of nothing unusual, no assistance was rendered. A smaller child in an adjoining room remained unharmed.</td>

| Albert K. Williams Killed By Ninth Street Car |
| Had Long Been Prominent in Washington Business and Fraternal Circles-- |
| Funeral Friday |
| A 9th street car ran over and instantly killed Mr. Albert K. Williams at the intersection of 9th and K streets last night. The accident occurred at 8:30 o'clock. An inquest is to be held Thursday at 11 o'clock at the sixth precinct station. Motorman George H. Peyton and Conductor Julian Talliferro of the car which ran over Mr. Williams were arrested and held until Coroner Nevitt satisfied himself that the occurrence was wholly accidental. They are to appear at the inquest. |

| Interments in the Historic Congressional Cemetery | Last Updated: 2/13/2015 |

Mr. Williams has been prominent in the affairs of Washington for about forty years. He came to Washington in 1862. At the time of his death he held membership in various Masonic bodies and also in the Oldest Inhabitants' Association. He was a native of Vermont, but moved to Washington from Galena, Ill. For many years he conducted a book store here, on Pennsylvania avenue near the Capitol, then on 7th street, where he remained twenty-eight years, but recently located at No. 813 G street northwest. His sons, Robert and George, were associated with him in the G street business. The others who survive Mr. Williams are Mrs. E.C. Grumley and Miss Tina Williams, daughters, and a third son, Albert W. Williams, jr., all of this city. The family lived at No. 1014 10th street. Mr. Williams was sixty-eight years of age.

How the Accident Occurred
He had been to a residence to which he expected to remove today, No. 101 11th street northeast. He transferred from the F street line to a car on 9th street, intending to alight at the corner of K street and walk out K street to 10th street. As the car reached K street, according to the story of conductor Bowen of the north-bound car, he stepped to the running board. He is then supposed to have jumped from the car before it came to a full stop and to have landed less than five feet in front of an oncoming train on the other track. Motorman Peyton of the latter car saw Mr. Williams in front of his car and reversed his motor instantly. The distance was too little, however, and the car was on Mr. Williams before anything could be done to save him. The train was backed off the body. When the crew of the two cars picked it up the body was found to be badly mangled and life was already extinct.
No arrangements have yet been made for the funeral, but it will probably be held Friday afternoon. He will be buried with Masonic honors, Columbia Lodge, No. 3, F.A.A.M., having charge. Delegations will be present from Lafayette Chapter, No. 5, R.A.M., and from Potomac Commandery, No. 3, K.T., and from the Scottish Rite body. The Oldest Inhabitants' Association will also send a delegation.

Mr. Williams was united in marriage with Selina W. Rice in Galena, Ill., about the year 1855. His wife, who is herself troubled with heart affection, was prostrated by the news of the death, and a physician was at once summoned to give her needed attention. Her condition subsequently improved.

God needed one more angel child
Amidst His shining band,
And so He bent with loving smile
And clasped my darling's hand.

If I could whisper one loving word in his ear
It would cease forever those flowing tears.

The Evening Star, April 21, 1875

Locals.
About 1 o’clock today, Edward Williams, a white man was found drowned near the 4th street wharf. It is said that he belongs to one of the yacht clubs.

The Evening Star, April 22, 1875

The Sad Fate of Mr. Ed. Williams
It was briefly mentioned in The Star of yesterday that the body of a man had been found at the 6th street wharf, and that it was that of Mr. Ed. Williams. Dr. Patterson, the coroner, was notified, and his inquiries developed the following facts: The deceased, Edward P. Williams, was a late printer at the Treasury and was a member of the Washington Yacht Club, and resided at 725 6th street southeast. On Tuesday evening he and others were on their yacht, "Ella Treadwell," lying off 11th street wharf. Some parties desiring to go ashore the deceased rowed them and returned to the yacht, where he was last seen bailing out his boat. It was supposed that he had subsequently gone ashore, but his friends yesterday finding no trace of him instituted a
The coroner did not deem an inquest necessary. The remains were taken in charge by the plate printers and removed to Buchly's undertaking establishment on Pennsylvania avenue, near 9th street, and then to the late residence of the deceased opposite the Marine barracks. The deceased was about 35 years of age, and leaves a wife and three small children. He was a man much beloved by a host of friends, and possessed a genial disposition and benevolent nature. He was a member of Washington Naval Lodge, No. 4, Naval Chapter, No. 6, and Columbia Commandery, No. 2, of the Masonic fraternity. It is supposed that while in the act of bailing, the water being very rough at the time, that he must have lost his balance and fell overboard, and not being able to swim was soon drowned.

Denham's name was coupled with his. Since then, it is stated, he has been at Clifton Springs, N.Y., undergoing treatment for a severe cerebral disease.

The outcome of the case will be awaited with the greatest interest, not only in ecclesiastical circles, but by a large number of those who have learned of the affair and the circumstances surrounding it. It may be several days before the conclusion of the trial is reached.

Trial of the Charges Before an Ecclesiastical Court

Statement Made by the Father of the Young Woman Who Brings the Accusation

The trial of Rev. Gilbert F. Williams, former pastor of Christ Church, Navy Yard, before the ecclesiastical court, on the charge of immoral conduct with a member of his congregation, continued this morning at St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral Church, 3rd and A streets southeast.

The session began this morning at 10 o'clock, with all the members of the court in attendance. Rev. A.R. Stuart of Christ Church, Georgetown, presided at his morning's session, which lasted until 1 o'clock, and then adjourned for an hour in order to allow the members to take lunch.

Little was done yesterday but to fully organize the court. The form of subpoena for the witnesses was decided upon, and they were sent out. It was stated that there are about fifty witnesses on each side, among whom, a Star reporter was informed, will be Bishop Satterlee himself.

Rev. Mr. Williams was present this morning at the proceedings as was his wife. She is firmly convinced of his innocence and has so asserted herself since the case was first brought to the public notice. The accused minister appeared as if he had undergone a terrible mental and physical strain, and seemed as if he felt his position keenly.

Review of the Case

This morning Mr. L.A. Wilmer of Port Tobacco, who was selected by Bishop Satterlee as church advocate to do the prosecuting, began a review of the case. He presented in a strong light the evidence which existed so far in the case, and made a plea for conviction. A number of witnesses were examined, it was stated, and Miss Denham, the accuser, was present with her father to make her statement before the court.

The young girl was firm as to the guilt of her former pastor and spiritual adviser.

Under the church canon, applied to this special case, it will be necessary for the plaintiff to bring strong evidence by other witnesses to prove the truth of her statement.

It was alleged that Miss Denham had provided for this.

There has not been a similar case to this in the Maryland dioceses, it was stated to the reporter this morning, for over fifty years. The last was in 1847.

The trial was still in session when this report closed. It was stated several days will probably be taken in which to finish the proceedings.

Trial of the Rector Before the Ecclesiastical Court

The trial of Rev. Gilbert F. Williams continued at St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral Church this morning. The session of the ecclesiastical court began at 10 o'clock, and lasted until after 1, when proceedings were adjourned until 10 o'clock Monday morning. Miss Denham, the prosecuting witness, was on the stand for over an hour this morning. She told a story still further of her alleged seduction, and it was stated, although she was cross-examined closely, that she stood the test remarkably well. The defendant and his wife were present. It is believed the trial may take a week or ten days, as Miss Denham is about the only witness who has been examined.

Dr. Williams' Trial

The Young Woman Who is Prosecuting Him Gives Her Testimony

The ecclesiastical court of the diocese of Washington, which has been engaged for some days in trying Rev. Dr. Gilbert F. Williams, formerly rector of Christ Church, Navy Yard, on charges of immorality while in charge of Christ Church, continued its questions yesterday. Miss Denham was on the stand in the morning and her father was summoned in the afternoon.

The Williams Trial

The trial of Rev. Gilbert F. Williams was continued at St. Mark's pro-cathedral Church at 10 o'clock this morning. The reading of the journal and the corrections, as usual, took some time. When this was finished the examination of witnesses was begun and took up a greater part of the day. Among those who gave testimony were some of the members of the vestry of Christ Church, navy yard, which was Mr. Williams' parish. Miss Denham was present at the church, but was not on the witness stand. It is thought probable, however, that she will be called again. Her parents have been examined. There are a number of other witnesses to be heard from, and the end of the trial will not be reached for a week or more, it is thought.

The Evening Star, January 31, p. 7

Rev. Williams' Trial

Prosecution Has Not Yet Closed Its Testimony

There are a few more witnesses to be examined for the prosecution in the trial of Rev. Gilbert F. Williams, which is being held at St. Mark's pro-Cathedral Church, 2d and A streets southeast. Among the number, it is stated by a gentleman closely connected with the trial, will be some lady members of the congregation, who will tell of the defendant's behavior toward them.

During the examination of some witnesses, who were members of the vestry of the church when Mr. Williams was pastor, some testimony was given which the defendant criticised severely and declared to be false from beginning to end. It was declared that he said one of the witnesses had perjured himself in the testimony given.

Rev. Mr. Williams has not been put on the stand as yet, and it is not known when he will be. It is probable that Miss Denham will be recalled to the stand.

The Evening Star, February 1, 1898, p. 2

Trial of Mr. Williams

Proceedings of the Ecclesiastical Court Now in Session

The trial of Rev. Gilbert F. Williams, former pastor of Christ Church, Navy Yard, was continued before the ecclesiastical court at St. Marks' Pro-Cathedral Church this morning. The prosecution has not yet finished with its witnesses. One of those notified to be on hand today, it was stated, was a lady who had been a member of his congregation, the nature of whose testimony could not be given out. Some members of the vestry of the church were examined yesterday, and one of them stated that his evidence was of such a character as to be rather damaging to the accused minister.

It is thought the witnesses for the prosecution will be examined during all the rest of the week, and that it may be another week before the trial is finished.

Mr. Williams, it is stated, stands the trial with great fortitude, and shows little signs of the terrible strain which he must be undergoing. This, it is declared, is in marked contrast to his wife, who is with him each day at the trial and who looks so badly as to earn the sympathy of all who see her. She has all along had and still has faith in her husband's innocence, and thinks he will be acquitted without a doubt.

The Evening Star, February 7, 1898, p. 2

The prosecution in the case of Rev. Gilbert F. Williams, who is being tried at St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral Church, was concluded Friday. Two ladies testified as to Mr. Williams' behavior toward them. The court adjourned Friday afternoon until this morning, when it began again. The defense is now going ahead with its witnesses. A lady has testified, it is stated, in Mr. Williams' behalf, telling of conversations which she had with Miss Denham. It is thought the case will continue the rest of the week.

The Evening Star, February 12, 1898, p. 11

Trial of Rev. Williams

Testimony Still Being Taken Before Ecclesiastical Court
No decision has been reached in the case of the Rev. Gilbert F. Williams, who is on trial before the standing committee of the diocese of Washington, for alleged improper relations with Miss Denham while he was connected with a church in Southeast Washington. It will take Mr. Williams, it is said, two days to complete his testimony, after which a number of witnesses will be introduced in rebuttal, which will probably consume another day. The testimony being all in, the arguments of counsel for the prosecution and for the defense will be heard. There has been a great amount of testimony taken in this case, and it will all have to be done over carefully before the trial board before any decision is reached, and it is not believed the decision will be announced before the latter part of next week.

The statements published yesterday to the effect that the trial board had about concluded that Mr. Williams was innocent of the charge are said to have been premature, inasmuch as a large bulk of the testimony has not been gone over, and, in fact, is not in shape to be read.

Trial of Rev. G.F. Williams

It is Thought All the Witnesses Have Been Examined

A Case Which Has Created Tremendous Interest In the Church--The Charges

The first trial before an ecclesiastical court of the diocese of Washington seems likely to be a most memorable one. There remains a dim tradition, known only as such to churchmen of this generation, that once, long years ago, the ecclesiastical court of the parent diocese of Maryland was convened to try a clergyman for some alleged moral delinquency. But hardly is the name known and few recall whether he was found guilty or innocent.

This is not likely to be the case with the trial of the Rev. Gilbert F. Williams, late rector of Christ Church, Washington, charged with the violation of his ordination vows, and with immoral conduct with a young woman of his congregation, well nigh two years ago.

For eight years he had been the popular, laborious, successful and everywhere esteemed rector of this among the most important parishes in the diocese. Under Bishop Paret he had been in the office of dean and of archdeacon of the convocation of Washington, placed for several years at the head of all the clergy of the new diocese of Washington. Over-work, however, had so far undermined his health that in the summer of 1896 he was forced to take an extended leave of absence in the effort to regain his strength.

While so absent the condition of a young woman set going the gossips of the parish, and while a number of names were bandied about, the story spread that the absent clergyman was the guilty party. But it was not until some months had passed, nor until the minister had returned, been requested by his vestry to resign and had again gone away that the girl herself ascribed to him the paternity of her child. He then called for an investigation and a trial, by letters both to the bishop and the chairman of the standing committee, beseeching them to arrange for his speedy trial.

This was begun on the 20th of January last at the Pro-Cathedral of St. Mark's Church, Washington, and without intermission since, except two days, has been continued each day from 10 o'clock a.m. to 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

L.A. Wilmer of Charles county, adjutant general of the state of Maryland, represents the church, William A. Meloy, esq., appearing as sole counsel for the accused. The canons of the Protestant Episcopal Church declare the defendant's right to have one counsel, and in this case the court ruled that he should have only one. Another canon denies admission to the court to any save the clergy and the defendant, and by permission of the court a few of his friends. This court still further limited by excluding all witnesses save the one on the stand. In order still further to avoid publicity the bishop asked the clergy not to avail themselves of the privilege of attending, and so very few have attended, and none have followed the entire trial.

The high reputation of the reverend defendant, the volume of the testimony presented, the exciting and sensational nature of the evidence, would have inevitably attracted the greatest public interest and widespread attention, not merely among the churchmen of the country, but other classes as well, had not the court immediately upon its organization ordered its doors closed, its officers put under oaths of secrecy, and under the canons of the church excluded both spectators and all reporters.

The court stenographer and its secretary have been seen passing and repassing with a daily growing bulk of testimony taken, now quite near 2,000 typewritten pages.
Witnesses for the prosecution ceased to be called in the fourth week, and no more summonses go out for witnesses on behalf of the defendant. These are plain signs that the trial is practically ended. Both sides claim the victory.

Should a majority of the court find Mr. Williams guilty of the charge, or of improper conduct at all, it remains for the bishop to say whether his sentence shall be degradation from the ministry or mere suspension.

Rev. Gilbert F. Williams Formally Deposed From Ministry

Charges Against Him Sustained

Violation of Ordination Vows, Unbecoming Conduct and Immorality

History of the Case

Rev. Gilbert F. Williams, formerly rector of Christ Church, Southeast Washington, was today deposed from the ministry of the Episcopal Church by Right Rev. Henry Y. Satterlee, bishop of the diocese of Washington for "violation of his ordination vows, conduct unbecoming a clergyman of the Episcopal Church and immorality."

The trail of Rev. Mr. Williams on this charge grew out of his alleged improper relations with a young lady member of his congregation about two years ago.

The trial began January 20 in the Pro-Cathedral of St. Mark's before an ecclesiastical court appointed by Bishop Satterlee, and, with the exception of two days, has continued in daily session ever since, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

L.A. Wilmer, adjutant general of Maryland, represented the church, and the Rev. Mr. Williams was defended by Mr. William A. Meloy, the canons of the Episcopal Church allowing a clergyman under prosecution to have but one attorney.

Secrecy Observed

Every effort was made to keep the proceedings of the trial from the public, and non one was allowed in the room except the clergymen permitted by the canons, and Bishop Satterlee was so anxious to keep the proceedings quiet that he made a special request of the clergymen not to avail themselves of this privilege and not to attend the trial any more than possible. Only one witness in the case was allowed in the room at a time.

A large number of witnesses were examined, both for the prosecution and the defense, and the stenographers were kept busy transcribing notes, which filled more than 2,000 pages of typewritten matter.

The court finally concluded the hearing, and after carefully summing up the evidence which had been presented to them decided by a canonical majority that Mr. Williams was guilty of all the charges and specifications filed against him, which were "an act involving a breach of his ordination vows, conduct unbecoming a clergyman and immorality." The findings and proceedings of the court were transmitted to Bishop Satterlee and met with his approval.

The bishop decided that Rev. Mr. Williams should be deposed from the ministry of the Episcopal Church. This morning at the conclusion of morning prayer at the Pro-Cathedral of St. Mark's the bishop performed this painful duty in the presence of those members of the congregation who chose to remain, and with the bishop's chaplains, Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander, Rev. Mr. Hayes and Rev. Mr. Devries, as witnesses to the ceremony, as required by the canons of the Episcopal Church.

This proceeding ends Mr. Williams' career in the ministry of the Episcopal Church, as he can never again be ordained by any bishop.

Pastor Eight Years

For eight years Mr. Williams had been rector of Christ Church, and a more popular divine could not be found in the diocese.

He was highly esteemed by every member of his congregation. Before the diocese of Washington was separated from the diocese of Maryland Mr. Williams served as archdeacon of the diocese for Bishop Paret.

About two years ago Mr. Williams health gave away and he was forced to take a vacation. He had not been away long before Dame Rumor had some ugly things to say about him in connection with one of his most ardent young lady church workers, and in a short while the young lady gave birth to a child, of which she claimed Mr. Williams was the father.

The matter was reported to the standing committee of the diocese of Washington, as required by the canons. Mr. Williams called for an investigation of the charges, and asked for a speedy trial, which, after dragging along for more than six weeks, resulted as stated above.

This is the first trial to be held in Washington before an ecclesiastical court, and on account of the prominence of both parties, has attracted attention throughout the diocese.

The trial of Rev. G.F. Williams for alleged immorality was begun on the 20th resulting in his being deposed from the ministry some weeks later

Crippled, Penniless Woman Kills Self; Unadvised of Monetary Aid at Hand.

A 58-year-old woman, penniless and crippled, committed suicide yesterday, even while a check for $75, her share in an estate which only recently had reached settlement, was being delivered to her address.

She was Mrs. Wallace E. Williams, known generally as Ida Johnston, who lived in a basement room at 43 G street, and who is believed to be prominently connected in Pittsburgh.

The woman was found dead in her bed last night with gas flowing from a tube by her side when Traffic Officer J.W. Cronnie broke down the door. Mrs. M. Tompkins, landlady, had appealed to the policeman when she smelled the fumes.

Only yesterday afternoon an envelope bearing a Pittsburgh postmark of May 29, and addressed to Mrs. Williams, had been delivered to the G street house. When it was opened by police today it was found to contain a check for $75, a bequest to her from a Pittsburgh relative.

According to friends of the dead woman this morning, Mrs. Williams had been a hairdresser here, but in recent years her crippled condition and her age combined to reduce her to poverty. A year ago a brother had died in Pittsburgh leaving her $1,500. This amount the woman invested in a hairdressing establishment which failed several months ago, it was said.

Authorities are now trying to locate relatives in Pittsburgh.

Death of a Member of Congress
We regret to learn that the Hon. James W. Williams, A Representative in Congress from the State of Maryland, died at his residence at an early hour on Friday morning last, from the effects of an attack of apoplexy.
Mr. W. had departed from home in his private carriage on his way to this city to attend Congress, and had only proceeded about three miles on his journey when the affliction which terminated his life came upon him. He was alone in the carriage at the time, and the driver knew nothing of his unfortunate situation until he had occasion to stop on the road, when Mr. W. was immediately conveyed back to his residence. He was the Representative from the district composed of Baltimore, Carroll, and Harford counties.

Coroner Hammett was one of those who employed Williams as a watchman, and saw him early Saturday evening. The coroner investigated the case yesterday and gave a certificate to the effect that the deceased came to his death from self-inflicted wounds. The fact that he was shot in a vital spot, and by his own pistol, and the further fact that he was known to have been despondent for some time past, preclude the probability of an accidental shooting.

National Intelligencer, Thursday, February 24, 1842

It is with the most poignant sorrow that we announce the death of the Honorable Lewis Williams, the long known and universally respected Representative from North Carolina, who expired at his lodgings in this city yesterday, after an illness of barely two days' duration. So unexpected was this sad event, so suddenly has it come upon us, that we can scarcely yet contemplate it as a reality. On Sunday he dined with a friend, cheerful, happy, and apparently in the best of health; on Monday, he was at his post in the House of Representatives attending to his public duties; at noon on Wednesday he lies a lifeless corpse. So sudden a death of one so cherished in the affections of his brother Members, and of all who knew him, is indeed an event to “give us pause.” And never have we known any similar bereavement to produce a deeper sensation or a more general gloom. The disease which has thus suddenly deprived his country of one of the most honest, most faithful, and most enlightened of Representatives, and one of the purest and most virtuous of men, was, we are informed, bilious pleurisy; it attacked him on Monday, and so rapid was its progress that, although a man of robust frame, it terminated his life in forty-eight hours.

Mr. Williams entered Congress, a Representative from his native State of North Carolina, in December, 1815, and continued such, by repeated elections, to the day of his death, making an unbroken service of more than twenty-six years; a proof at once of his own fidelity to his trust and of the confidence of his constituents very rarely equaled in the history of our Government. He had long been what is termed "the Father of the House;" but notwithstanding that venerable title and the length of service it implied, he had reached the age of only fifty-six years. A sincere Christian, he was a man of the strictest morals, and one of the most conscientious and unswerving public servants whom we have ever known. Such, indeed, were his merits, public and personal, and such his eminent value as a Representative, that we look up on his death as a serious loss to the whole country, as well as to his immediate constituents.

The National Intelligencer, Saturday, February 26, 1842

Congress--The Funeral

The funeral solemnities of the Hon. Lewis Williams, for so many years one of the Representatives of the State of North Carolina, took place in the Representatives Hall, yesterday, at the appointed hour. The general esteem in which the deceased was held in this community, and the universal regret which his death has occasioned, drew an unusually large assemblage of the citizens of Washington, and others now at the seat of Government, as well as of the Members of the House, to witness the solemn and impressive scene. The galleries were crowded. But all audible conversation was suppressed; and over the whole assembly gathered to witness the ceremony an unwonted silence prevailed. Soon after twelve o'clock, the Committee of Arrangements entered the Hall, wearing white scarves, and followed by the Pall-bearers, and then by the Body, which was enclosed in a coffin covered with black velvet and having on it a plain silver plate bearing... the usual inscription. The North Carolina Representation followed, as mourners, in black scarves, and took the seats prepared for their reception, opposite to the bier, on the left. The Rev. Septimus Tuston, one of the Chaplains to Congress, assumed his place at the Clerk's table and immediately in front of the seats of the members. Then came the Chief Justice and Judges of the Supreme Court, preceded by the Officers of the Court; and shortly after, the Senate, headed by their President and Sergeant-at-Arms, the Member of the House rising and continuing on their feet until the Members of the co-ordinate Branch of the Legislature were seated in the places assigned them. Major General Scott and General Jones, of the Army, were present, and several members of the Diplomatic Corps evinced their respect to the deceased and to the Government by their personal attendance on the occasion.

The Chaplain then introduced the services by reading, in a deliberate, distinct, and reverential voice, the ninetieth Psalm; which was followed by a prayer eminently appropriate to the event that had, in so sudden and unlooked-for-a manner assembled in that Hall the several Departments of the Government. The Preacher then took, as the ground-work of the eloquent and impressive address which succeeded, the verse of the 8th chapter of Romans: "For I esteem the sufferings of this present time not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." After advertising to the very short time (scarcely a month) which had eclipsed since he had been called to address many of the same auditors on a similar occasion, at which time he had dwelt on the gradual and certain decay which was the lot of fallen humanity in this world, he said he had now selected a theme of a more cheering character, viz. the bright and happy contrast in the condition of a Christian man before and after death; which he illustrated in a very just and suitable manner, with much earnestness, solemnity, and tenderness of feeling. Having contemplated the contrast referred to in his text under several different aspects, he came to the event which had recently occurred, and spoke of the deceased member in a manner peculiarly delicate and judicious, referring to the eloquent and touching eulogiums which had been pronounced upon his character in both Houses of Congress on the preceding day, and to the sketch there presented of his life and leading public services. The view on which he preferred to dwell had reference to his long, open, uniform, unpretending but consistent, and unblemished profession of the religion of Christ, on which he dilated with a soothing satisfaction. The discourse closed with a brief but affecting appeal to every one present to prepare for the change which awaits us all.

The religious services having terminated, the line of procession was taken up, in the order reported in the programme prepared by the Committee of Arrangements, and, proceeding out of the Hall and through the Rotundo, entered the carriages in waiting, which, wheeling in succession through the north gate of the Capitol square, formed in line on the broad road that leaves the southeast corner of the Capitol grounds; whence it moved on to the Congressional burying ground, where the body was deposited in the receiving vault, until a tomb, similar to those which mark the final resting place of so many deceased Members, can be prepared for its last earthly home.

Interments in the Historic Congressional Cemetery  Last Updated: 2/13/2015
If I could meet, when all was done,
The clasping of your hand.
Armour, your true and loving hand.

When weary toils are through.

Mrs. Matilda W. Williams, over sixty years old, died quite suddenly at her late residence, 304 E Street N.W., this morning, as is supposed from heart disease. Mrs. W. kept a boarding house and her servants not having come home this morning she went into the kitchen and made preparations for breakfast. She was found dead a few minutes after she went downstairs by some of the family and appeared to have fallen, cutting her face on the edge of the water tank. Mrs. W. was a highly respected lady, the mother of the late S.S. Williams, Dr. Williams, and James Williams, formerly reporter of the Express, and had resided here over 26 years.

The Evening Star, August 5, 1864
Dead -- S.S. Williams, Esq., a well known lawyer of this city, died yesterday of typhoid fever. His death was unexpected although he has been ill for some days. Attending Mr. Williams death is a circumstance which well illustrates the really beneficial effect of Life Insurance Companies. A few months ago Mr. W. was applied to by an agent of a Life Insurance Company to have his life insured. He scoffed the idea and claimed that his chances for a long life were as good as those of any other of his acquaintances. He was eventually persuaded and had his life insured for $5,000, premium of $33 per quarter, to be paid quarterly. He has paid for but two quarters (all that was due) and now at his death his family receives the handsome sum of $5,000.

S.S. Williams, Esq. is lying very ill of typhoid fever at his residence on 8th Street between L and M.

Death of Mr. Zadok Williams

The venerable Mr. Zadok Williams, died last evening at the residence of his son, Joseph Z. Williams, 1314 3d street southeast.  Mr. Williams had spent all the eighty-seven years of his life in this city, and was familiar with its early history, retaining a remarkably clear recollection of scenes and incidents of former years.  Mr. Williams was born near Benning, February 15, 1805.  His father, who served in the War of 1812, came to this city from Prince George's county, Md., in 1810, and located in East Washington.  In 1814, when the British attacked this city, Mr. Williams remembered well when Commodore Tingey had the old Navy Yard bridge burned to keep the British from coming to the city.  He also gathered with an old colored man many pieces of the old guns destroyed by the British at the marine barracks and placed them in an old lockup that stood near the navy yard gate.  When quite a young man he learned the tailor business under Mr. Jewell in Georgetown and had made garments for many celebrated and distinguished persons of the day, among them Mr. E.W.P. Custis of Arlington, with whom he was personally acquainted.  He owned from time to time much property in this section and also owned the famous "race course track," purchased from the late Mr. Thomas Blagden, and sold it to the United States government to form a part of the asylum tract, reserving the original race track, which he subsequently sold to private individuals.  He married in 1828 Miss Edney Ann Denoon, by whom he had a large family.  Two sons and three daughters survive him -- Mr. Joseph Z. Williams, Mr. George Williams, Mrs. Joseph Grinder, Mrs. Enoch M. Norris and Mrs. M.F Rue -- and many grandchildren and great grandchildren.  Mrs. Williams died in July 1853, and he married a second time, Miss Mary Morton of Baltimore, Md., who died in July 1886, and left no family.  Mr. Williams was up to a few years ago engaged in business.  He was a member of the Oldest Inhabitants' Society and was the oldest parishioner of Christ Church, East Washington.  The funeral will take place tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock from the late residence.  The interment will be at Congressional cemetery.

Fatality at a Fire

A Brave Fireman Loses His Life in a Smoke Trap

The Janitor of a Building Also Has a Narrow Escape--

The Fire in the Basement of the Blau Building

At an early hour last evening there was a fatal fire in the Blau building, at the northwest corner of 14th and G streets.  Considerable damage was also done to the building.  Foreman Zadock Williams of the chemical engine lost his life through suffocation, and Edward Allen, the colored janitor, was found in an unconscious condition on the second floor of the burning building.  It was about 5:30 o'clock when Correspondents Crounse and Bangs of the World bureau, which is located on the ground floor of the building on the 14th street side, discovered fire in the building.  A telephone message soon brought the chemical engine to the scene of the fire.  The flames had seemingly gained such headway that Foreman Williams ordered one of his men to have an alarm sounded, which brought several engine companies to the scene.  It was difficult for a time to locate the fire and to get the streams of water upon it.  Smoke issued in dense and suffocating volumes, apparently coming through the floor and walls of the World office.  Finally the flames were reached in the rear of the basement beneath that office, where they had originated.

How Williams Died

While waiting for the arrival of the engine and truck companies, Foreman Williams went in the basement to operate his chemical extinguisher in hope of getting the fire well under control.  His failure to return from that part of the burning building caused no great alarm, for his comrades thought of course that he was in a safe place, but in this they were mistaken, for the door leading to the particular part of the building in which the fire started, it appears, had closed on him, and he was confined there in the cloud of smoke unable to get out.  Soon after the arrival of the engines the members of No. 1 company had flooded the basement.
Foreman Boss and others were working there in the dark, Foreman Boss stumbled over Williams' inanimate form. Foreman Williams was lying on the floor, with his face downward in six inches of water. When being carried to the pavement outside there was but little, if any, signs of life. The patrol wagon carried the unfortunate fireman quickly to the Emergency Hospital, but he was dead when the physicians there examined him. The deceased was in the building, it is thought, fully fifteen or twenty minutes before he was discovered.

The Janitor's Narrow Escape

Soon after the finding of Foreman Williams, and when the fire was under control, one of the firemen found on the second floor, Edward Allen, the colored janitor, who had been cut off from escape by the smoke and heat. He was unconscious, but when taken to the Emergency Hospital his condition improved.

The origin of the fire could not be ascertained. The building is owned by Herman E. Blau. The real estate office of Banes & Simpson is on the first floor, adjoining the World office, while on the second floor is the office of John F. Waggaman, as is that of the Driggs Ordnance Company. The loss amounted to about $600, of which $400 was to the World office. The Lincoln and Columbia insurance companies will settle the bills.

The body of the dead fireman was taken to the engine house from the hospital, and later was removed to the late home of the deceased, No. 1218 G street southeast.

A Relief Fund

Soon after the flames had been extinguished a fund was started for the family of the deceased fireman, who was 26 years old, and who leaves a wife and child. Those who contributed to the fund were Banes & Simpson, $50; Herman E. Blau, $15; Charles G. Sloan, $10; Mr. Harrington, $10; Robert E. Morris and John F. Waggaman, $25.

Mr. Charles Simpson of the firm of Banes & Simpson will receive all contributions that may be made to the fund. The circumstances of the case are distressing, the little family being left completely destitute by the tragedy.

Meets Horrible Death
Albert K. Williams Killed By Ninth Street Car
Funeral Friday

A 9th street car ran over and instantly killed Mr. Albert K. Williams at the intersection of 9th and K streets last night. The accident occurred at 8:30 o'clock. An inquest is to be held Thursday at 11 o'clock at the sixth precinct station. Motorman George H. Peyton and Conductor Julian Talliferro of the car which ran over Mr. Williams were arrested and held until Coroner Nevitt satisfied himself that the occurrence was wholly accidental. They are to appear at the inquest.

Mr. Williams has been prominent in the affairs of Washington for about forty years. He came to Washington in 1862. At the time of his death he held membership in various Masonic bodies and also in the Oldest Inhabitants' Association. He was a native of Vermont, but moved to Washington from Galena, Ill. For many years he conducted a book store here, on Pennsylvania avenue near the Capitol, then on 7th street, where he remained twenty-eight years, but recently located at No. 813 G street northwest. His sons, Robert and George, were associated with him in the G street business. The others who survive Mr. Williams are Mrs. E.C. Grumley and Miss Tina Williams, daughters, and a third son, Albert W. Williams, jr., all of this city. The family lived at No. 1014 10th street. Mr. Williams was sixty-eight years of age.

How the Accident Occurred
He had been to a residence to which he expected to remove today, No. 101 11th street northeast. He transferred from the F street line to a car on 9th street, intending to alight at the corner of K street and walk out K street to 10th street. As the car reached K street, according to the story of conductor Bowen of the north-bound car, he stepped to the running board. He is then supposed to have jumped from the car before it came to a full stop and to have landed less than five feet in front of an oncoming train on the other track. Motorman Peyton of the latter car saw Mr. Williams in front of his car and reversed his motor instantly. The distance was too little, however, and the car was on Mr. Williams before anything could be done to save him. The train was backed off the body. When the crew of the two cars picked it up the body was found to be badly mangled and life was already extinct.
No arrangements have yet been made for the funeral, but it will probably be held Friday afternoon. He will be buried with Masonic honors, Columbia Lodge, No. 3, F.A.A.M., having charge. Delegations will be present from Lafayette Chapter, No. 5, R.A.M., and from Potomac Commandery, No. 3, K.T., and from the Scottish Rite body. The Oldest Inhabitants’ Association will also send a delegation.

Mr. Williams was united in marriage with Selina W. Rice in Galena, Ill., about the year 1855. His wife, who is herself troubled with heart affection, was prostrated by the news of the death, and a physician was at once summoned to give her needed attention. Her condition subsequently improved.

And so He bent with loving smile
And clasped my darling's hand.

The Evening Star, April 22, 1875
The Sad Fate of Mr. Ed. Williams
It was briefly mentioned in The Star of yesterday that the body of a man had been found at the 6th street wharf, and that it was that of Mr. Ed. Williams. Dr. Patterson, the coroner, was notified, and his inquiries developed the following facts: The deceased, Edward P. Williams, was a late printer at the Treasury and was a member of the Washington Yacht Club, and resided at 725 6th street southeast. On Tuesday evening he and others were on their yacht, "Ella Treadwell," lying off 11th street wharf. Some parties desiring to go ashore the deceased rowed them and returned to the yacht, where he was last seen bailing out his boat. It was supposed that he had subsequently gone ashore, but his friends yesterday finding no trace of him instituted a search, and the body was recovered. The coroner did not deem an inquest necessary. The remains were taken in charge by the plate printers and removed to Buchly's undertaking establishment on Pennsylvania avenue, near 9th street, and then to the late residence of the deceased opposite the Marine barracks. The deceased was about 35 years of age, and leaves a wife and three small children. He was a man much beloved by a host of friends, and possessed a genial disposition and benevolent nature. He was a member of Washington Naval Lodge, No. 4, Naval Chapter, No. 6, and Columbia Commandery, No. 2, of the Masonic fraternity. It is supposed that while in the act of bailing, the water being very rough at the time, that he must have lost his balance and fell overboard, and not being able to swim was soon drowned.

The members of Columbia Commandery, Knights Templar; Naval Lodge of Masons; Plate Printers' Union, and Washington Light Guard turned out in large numbers and marched in procession to the grave.

Williams, Rev. Gilbert F.

Suddenly on Sunday, November 24, 1918 at his residence, 61 Randolph place northwest, Rev. Gilbert T., husband of Frances B. Williams. Funeral from his late residence, Wednesday, November 27th at 2 p.m. Interment private.

The Evening Star, January 1, 1898

Reverend Gilbert F. Williams resigned the pastorate of Christ Church, Navy Yard and members of the standing committee of the Episcopal Diocese of Washington acting as an advisory council to Bishop Satterlee made an investigation of alleged scandalous conduct on the part of the late rector. The charges embraced reflections upon Mr. Williams' character of a most serious sort.

The Evening Star, January 20, 1898

Rev. Mr. Williams' Trial

Before Ecclesiastical Court

The trial of Rev. Gilbert F. Williams, former rector of Christ Church, Navy Yard, on the grave charges which have been preferred against him at the instance of Miss Nettie Denham, a former member of his congregation, began this morning at St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral Church, 3d and A streets southeast. The proceedings were had before an ecclesiastical court composed of the following ministers: Rev. A.R. Stuart, president of the court, Christ Church, Georgetown; Rev. C.E. Buck; Rev. Charles F. Sontag, Upper Marlboro, Md.; Rev. James E. Poindexter, Charles county, Md.; Rev. Charles H.S. Mayo, Hyattsville, Md. Rev. Thomas S. Childs, archdeacon of the diocese, it was stated this morning, was originally a member of the court, but he declined to sit. As he has not resigned, and there was, therefore, no vacancy, his place could not be filled, so there was one missing. While Bishop Satterlee is not a member of the court, it is stated that he will in all likelihood be present at the sessions.

The place of prosecutor is filled by L.A. Wilmer of Port Tobacco, who served as "church advocate." The charges, it was said, were two in number. The first of them alleged the violation by Rev. Mr. Williams of his ordination vows. The second was the still graver charge of undue familiarity, immorality and illicit intercourse. The accused was represented by Mr. William A. Meloy, who has as assistant counsel Mr. J. Holdsworth Gordon of Washington. Under a church canon prescribed for such cases only one man can appear for the prosecution and only one as counsel. It was stated, however, the point would likely be strained and Mr. Melloy would have Mr. Gordon to actively assist him in conducting the case. The trial took place behind closed doors, and only those closely connected with the case and with knowledge of the circumstances relating to it were allowed to be present. Reporters were rigorously excluded.

Mr. Williams Present

Mr. Meloy, counsel for the defense, said to a Star reporter this morning that Mr. Williams was in the city and would appear at the trial. He stated, in fact, that it was at Mr. Williams' urgent appeal that the trial was brought in order to clear his skirts of any grave charges as had been preferred against him. He said further that Mr. Williams, ever since the matter had been brought to public notice, had been endeavoring to have the trial brought. He is at present visiting a friend in Southeast Washington, having come here from Clifton Springs, N.Y., where he has been for some time on account of ill health. Since the charges were first brought against him, it is said, his health has been so bad that he could not have taken charge of a parish if it had been possible under the circumstances. His family is said to be in Baltimore.

Miss Denham, the young lady who is a party to the case with Mr. Williams, appeared as the chief witness against him at the trial. It is understood that a large number of other witnesses appeared, but their names were not given out for publication.

The Rector's Congregation

Rev. Mr. Williams was rector of Christ Church, Navy Yard, until something over a year ago. His health became so bad that he was granted a leave of absence by his congregation, in order for his recuperation. He went to South Carolina for this purpose. During his absence reports began to be circulated, in which Miss Denham's name was coupled with his. She was a prominent member of his congregation, one of the most earnest workers in the parish, being a member of the choir and taking great interest in all church work. Mr. Williams finally returned to Washington. After some little time he resigned the charge, ostensibly on account of ill health. Since then, it is stated, he has been at Clifton Springs, N.Y., undergoing treatment for a severe cerebral disease.

A child was born to Miss Denham, which lived a few months and died in the early part of the winter.

The outcome of the case will be awaited with the greatest interest, not only in ecclesiastical circles, but by a large number of those who have learned of the affair and the circumstances surrounding it. It may be several days before the conclusion of the trial is reached.

Rev. Mr. Williams' Case

Statement Made by the Father of the Young Woman Who Brings the Accusation

The trial of Rev. Gilbert F. Williams, former pastor of Christ Church, Navy Yard, before the ecclesiastical court, on the charge of immoral conduct with a member of his congregation, continued this morning at St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral Church, 3rd and A streets southeast.

The session began this morning at 10 o'clock, with all the members of the court in attendance. Rev. A.R. Stuart of Christ Church, Georgetown, presided at his morning's session, which lasted until 1 o'clock, and then adjourned for an hour in order to allow the members to take lunch.

Little was done yesterday but to fully organize the court. The form of subpoena for the witnesses was decided upon, and they were sent out. It was stated that there are about fifty witnesses on each side, among whom, a Star reporter was informed, will be Bishop Satterlee himself.

Rev. Mr. Williams was present this morning at the proceedings as was his wife. She is firmly convinced of his innocence and has so asserted herself since the case was first brought to the public notice. The accused minister appeared as if he had undergone a terrible mental and physical strain, and seemed as if he felt his position keenly.

Review of the Case

This morning Mr. L.A. Wilmer of Port Tobacco, who was selected by Bishop Satterlee as church advocate to do the prosecuting, began a review of the case. He presented in a strong light the evidence which existed so far in the case, and made a plea for conviction. A number of witnesses were examined, it was stated, and Miss Denham, the accuser, was present with her father to make her statement before the court.

The young girl was firm as to the guilt of her former pastor and spiritual adviser.

Under the church canon, applied to this special case, it will be necessary for the plaintiff to bring strong evidence by other witnesses to prove the truth of her statement.

It was alleged that Miss Denham had provided for this.

There has not been a similar case to this in the Maryland dioceses, it was stated to the reporter this morning, for over fifty years. The last was in 1847.

The trial was still in session when this report closed. It was stated several days will probably be taken in which to finish the proceedings.

Trial of the Rector Before the Ecclesiastical Court

The trial of Rev. Gilbert F. Williams continued at St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral Church this morning. The session of the ecclesiastical court began at 10 o'clock, and lasted until after 1, when proceedings were adjourned until 10 o'clock Monday morning. Miss Denham, the prosecuting witness, was on the stand for over an hour this morning. She told a story still further of her alleged seduction, and it was stated, although she was cross-examined closely, that she stood the test remarkably well. The defendant and his wife were present. It is believed the trial may take a week or ten days, as Miss Denham is about the only witness who has been examined.

Dr. Williams' Trial

The Young Woman Who is Prosecuting Him Gives Her Testimony

The ecclesiastical court of the diocese of Washington, which has been engaged for some days in trying Rev. Dr. Gilbert F. Williams, formerly rector of Christ Church, Navy Yard, on charges of immorality while in charge of Christ Church, continued its questions yesterday. Miss Denham was on the stand in the morning and her father was summoned in the afternoon.

The Williams Trial

The trial of Rev. Gilbert F. Williams was continued at St. Mark's pro-cathedral Church at 10 o'clock this morning. The reading of the journal and the corrections, as usual, took some time. When this was finished the examination of witnesses was begun and took up a greater part of the day. Among those who gave testimony were some of the members of the vestry of Christ Church, navy yard, which was Mr. Williams' parish. Miss Denham was present at the church, but was not on the witness stand. It is thought probable, however, that she will be called again. Her parents have been examined. There are a number of other witnesses to be heard from, and the end of the trial will not be reached for a week or more, it is thought.

Rev. Williams' Trial

Prosecution Has Not Yet Closed Its Testimony

There are a few more witnesses to be examined for the prosecution in the trial of Rev. Gilbert F. Williams, which is being held at St. Mark's pro-Cathedral Church, 2d and A streets southeast. Among the number, it is stated by a gentleman closely connected with the trial, will be some lady members of the congregation, who will tell of the defendant's behavior toward them.

During the examination of some witnesses, who were members of the vestry of the church when Mr. Williams was pastor, some testimony was given which the defendant criticised severely and declared to be false from beginning to end. It was declared that he said one of the witnesses had perjured himself in the testimony given.

Rev. Mr. Williams has not been put on the stand as yet, and it is not known when he will be. It is probable that Miss Denham will be recalled to the stand.

Trial of Mr. Williams

Proceedings of the Ecclesiastical Court Now in Session

The trial of Rev. Gilbert F. Williams, former pastor of Christ Church, Navy Yard, was continued before the ecclesiastical court at St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral Church this morning. The prosecution has not yet finished with its witnesses. One of those notified to be on hand today, it was stated, was a lady who had been a member of his congregation, the nature of whose testimony could not be given out. Some members of the vestry of the church were examined yesterday, and one of them stated that his evidence was of such a character as to be rather damaging to the accused minister.

It is thought the witnesses for the prosecution will be examined during all the rest of the week, and that it may be another week before the trial is finished.

Mr. Williams, it is stated, stands the trial with great fortitude, and shows little signs of the terrible strain which he must be undergoing. This, it is declared, is in marked contrast to his wife, who is with him each day at the trial and who looks so badly as to earn the sympathy of all who see her. She has all along had and still has faith in her husband's innocence, and thinks he will be acquitted without a doubt.

The Evening Star, February 7, 1898, p. 2

The prosecution in the case of Rev. Gilbert F. Williams, who is being tried at St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral Church, was concluded Friday. Two ladies testified as to Mr. Williams' behavior toward them. The court adjourned Friday afternoon until this morning, when it began again. The defense is now going ahead with its witnesses. A lady has testified, it is stated, in Mr. Williams' behalf, telling of conversations which she had with Miss Denham. It is thought the case will continue the rest of the week.

Trial of Rev. Williams

Testimony Still Being Taken Before Ecclesiastical Court
The statements published yesterday to the effect that the trial board had about concluded that Mr. Williams was innocent of the charge are said to have been premature, inasmuch as a large bulk of the testimony has not been gone over, and, in fact, is not in shape to be read.

Trial of Rev. G.F. Williams

A Case Which Has Created Tremendous Interest In the Church--The Charges

The first trial before an ecclesiastical court of the diocese of Washington seems likely to be a most memorable one. There remains a dim tradition, known only as such to churchmen of this generation, that once, long years ago, the ecclesiastical court of the parent diocese of Maryland was convened to try a clergyman for some alleged moral delinquency. But hardly is the name known and few recall whether he was found guilty or innocent.

This is not likely to be the case with the trial of the Rev. Gilbert F. Williams, late rector of Christ Church, Washington, charged with the violation of his ordination vows, and with immoral conduct with a young woman of his congregation, well nigh two years ago.

For eight years he had been the popular, laborious, successful and everywhere esteemed rector of this among the most important parishes in the diocese. Under Bishop Paret he had been in the office of dean and of archdeacon of the convocation of Washington, placed for several years at the head of all the clergy of the new diocese of Washington. Over-work, however, had so far undermined his health that in the summer of 1896 he was forced to take an extended leave of absence in the effort to regain his strength.

While so absent the condition of a young woman set going the gossip of the parish, and while a number of names were bandied about, the story spread that the absent clergyman was the guilty party. But it was not until some months had passed, nor until the minister had returned, been requested by his vestry to resign and had again gone away that the girl herself ascribed to him the paternity of her child. He then called for an investigation and a trial, by letters both to the bishop and the chairman of the standing committee, beseeching them to arrange for his speedy trial.

This was begun on the 20th of January last at the Pro-Cathedral of St. Mark's Church, Washington, and without intermission since, except two days, has been continued each day from 10 o'clock a.m. to 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

L.A. Wilmer of Charles county, adjutant general of the state of Maryland, represents the church, William A. Meloy, esq., appearing as sole counsel for the accused. The canons of the Protestant Episcopal Church declare the defendant's right to have one counsel, and in this case the court ruled that he should have only one. Another canon denies admission to the court to any save the clergy and the defendant, and by permission of the court a few of his friends. This court still further limited by excluding all witnesses save the one on the stand. In order still further to avoid publicity the bishop asked the clergy not to avail themselves of the privilege of attending, and so very few have attended, and none have followed the entire trial.

The high reputation of the reverend defendant, the volume of the testimony presented, the exciting and sensational nature of the evidence, would have inevitably attracted the greatest public interest and widespread attention, not merely among the churchmen of the country, but other classes as well, had not the court immediately upon its organization ordered its doors closed, its officers put under oaths of secrecy, and under the canons of the church excluded both spectators and all reporters.

The court stenographer and its secretary have been seen passing and repassing with a daily growing bulk of testimony taken, now quite near 2,000 typewritten pages.
Witnesses for the prosecution ceased to be called in the fourth week, and no more summonses go out for witnesses on behalf of the defendant. These are plain signs that the trial is practically ended. Both sides claim the victory.

Should a majority of the court find Mr. Williams guilty of the charge, or of improper conduct at all, it remains for the bishop to say whether his sentence shall be degradation from the ministry or mere suspension.

Rector No Longer

Rev. Gilbert F. Williams Formally Deposed From Ministry

Violation of Ordination Vows, Unbecoming Conduct and Immorality

History of the Case

Rev. Gilbert F. Williams, formerly rector of Christ Church, Southeast Washington, was today deposed from the ministry of the Episcopal Church by Right Rev. Henry Y. Satterlee, bishop of the diocese of Washington for "violation of his ordination vows, conduct unbecoming a clergyman of the Episcopal Church and immorality."

The trial of Rev. Mr. Williams on this charge grew out of his alleged improper relations with a young lady member of his congregation about two years ago.

The trial began January 20 in the Pro-Cathedral of St. Mark's before an ecclesiastical court appointed by Bishop Satterlee, and, with the exception of two days, has continued in daily session ever since, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

L.A. Wilmer, adjutant general of Maryland, represented the church, and the Rev. Mr. Williams was defended by Mr. William A. Meloy, the canons of the Episcopal Church allowing a clergyman under prosecution to have but one attorney.

Secrecy Observed

Every effort was made to keep the proceedings of the trial from the public, and non one was allowed in the room except the clergymen permitted by the canons, and Bishop Satterlee was so anxious to keep the proceedings quiet that he made a special request of the clergymen not to avail themselves of this privilege and not to attend the trial any more than possible. Only one witness in the case was allowed in the room at a time.

A large number of witnesses were examined, both for the prosecution and the defense, and the stenographers were kept busy transcribing notes, which filled more than 2,000 pages of typewritten matter.

The court finally concluded the hearing, and after carefully summing up the evidence which had been presented to them decided by a canonical majority that Mr. Williams was guilty of all the charges and specifications filed against him, which were "an act involving a breach of his ordination vows, conduct unbecoming a clergyman and immorality." The findings and proceedings of the court were transmitted to Bishop Satterlee and met with his approval.

The bishop decided that Rev. Mr. Williams should be deposed from the ministry of the Episcopal Church. This morning at the conclusion of morning prayer at the Pro-Cathedral of St. Mark's the bishop performed this painful duty in the presence of those members of the congregation who chose to remain, and with the bishop's chaplains, Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander, Rev. Mr. Hayes and Rev. Mr. Devries, as witnesses to the ceremony, as required by the canons of the Episcopal Church.

This proceeding ends Mr. Williams' career in the ministry of the Episcopal Church, as he can never again be ordained by any bishop.

Pastor Eight Years

For eight years Mr. Williams had been rector of Christ Church, and a more popular divine could not be found in the diocese.

He was highly esteemed by every member of his congregation. Before the diocese of Washington was separated from the diocese of Maryland Mr. Williams served as archdeacon of the diocese for Bishop Paret.

About two years ago Mr. Williams health gave away and he was forced to take a vacation. He had not been away long before Dame Rumor had some ugly things to say about him in connection with one of his most ardent young lady church workers, and in a short while the young lady gave birth to a child, of which she claimed Mr. Williams was the father.

The matter was reported to the standing committee of the diocese of Washington, as required by the canons. Mr. Williams called for an investigation of the charges, and asked for a speedy trial, which, after dragging along for more than six weeks, resulted as stated above.

This is the first trial to be held in Washington before an ecclesiastical court, and on account of the prominence of both parties, has attracted attention throughout the diocese.

The Evening Star, January 2, 1899, p. 11

The trial of Rev. G.F. Williams for alleged immorality was begun on the 20th resulting in his being deposed from the ministry some weeks later

Crippled, Penniless Woman Kills Self;
Unadvised of Monetary Aid at Hand.
A 58-year-old woman, penniless and crippled, committed suicide yesterday, even while a check for $75, her share in an estate which only recently had reached settlement, was being delivered to her address.

She was Mrs. Wallace E. Williams, known generally as Ida Johnston, who lived in a basement room at 43 G street, and who is believed to be prominently connected in Pittsburgh.

The woman was found dead in her bed last night with gas flowing from a tube by her side when Traffic
Officer J.W. Cronnie broke down the door. Mrs. M. Tompkins, landlady, had appealed to the policeman when she smelled the fumes.

Only yesterday afternoon an envelope bearing a Pittsburgh postmark of May 29, and addressed to Mrs.
Williams, had been delivered to the G street house. When it was opened by police today it was found to contain a check for $75, a bequest to her from a Pittsburgh relative.

According to friends of the dead woman this morning, Mrs. Williams had been a hairdresser here, but in recent years her crippled condition and her age combined to reduce her to poverty. A bear ago a brother had died in Pittsburg leaving her $1,500. This amount the woman invested in a hairdressing establishment which failed several months ago, it was said.

Authorities are now trying to locate relatives in Pittsburgh.

Death of a Member of Congress
We regret to learn that the Hon. James W. Williams, a Representative in Congress from the State of Maryland, died at his residence at an early hour on Friday morning last, from the effects of an attack of apoplexy.
Mr. W. had departed from home in his private carriage on his way to this city to attend Congress, and had only proceeded about three miles on his journey when the affliction which terminated his life came upon him. He was alone in the carriage at the time, and the driver knew nothing of his unfortunate situation until he had occasion to stop on the road, when Mr. W. was immediately conveyed back to his residence. He was the Representative from the district composed of Baltimore, Carroll, and Harford counties.

Committed Suicide
Joseph Williams Shoots Himself in a Fit of Despondency
Joseph Williams, a special watchman, who lived at 721 F street southwest, committed suicide Saturday evening by shooting himself through the head. Apart from the fact that Williams had been suffering from melancholy from some time past, no reason could be assigned for his act. He left no note behind, nor had he ever said anything to lead his friends to believe that he contemplated suicide.

Williams lived with his sister on F street and had recently made application for appointment on the police force. He took the examination and was expecting soon to be placed on the regular force. He was employed by a number of merchants of 7th street as a night watchman, and was well known in the neighborhood. Saturday evening his sister left the house for a time, and when she returned she found Williams lying stretched out on the floor of the kitchen with a gaping wound in his head. Just as she entered the house she heard the report of the pistol, and she hurried at once into the kitchen. She saw at a glance what had happened. The young man was still alive. Dr. Hammett and Dr. Cole were summoned, but they found that the bullet had pierced the man's brain and that there was no hope of saving his life. He died about 10 o'clock, after lingering unconscious for an hour.
Coroner Hamnett was one of those who employed Williams as a watchman, and saw him early Saturday evening. The coroner investigated the case yesterday and gave a certificate to the effect that the deceased came to his death from self-inflicted wounds. The fact that he was shot in a vital spot, and by his own pistol, and the further fact that he was known to have been despondent for some time past, preclude the probability of an accidental shooting.

National Intelligencer, Thursday, February 24, 1842

It is with the most poignant sorrow that we announce the death of the Honorable Lewis Williams, the long known and universally respected Representative from North Carolina, who expired at his lodgings in this city yesterday, after an illness of barely two days' duration. So unexpected was this sad event, so suddenly has it come upon us, that we can scarcely yet contemplate it as a reality. On Sunday he dined with a friend, cheerful, happy, and apparently in the best of health; on Monday, he was at his post in the House of Representatives attending to his public duties; at noon on Wednesday he lies a lifeless corpse. So sudden a death of one so cherished in the affections of his brother Members, and of all who knew him, is indeed an event to "give us pause." And never have we known any similar bereavement to produce a deeper sensation or a more general gloom. The disease which has thus suddenly deprived his country of one of the most honest, most faithful, and most enlightened of Representatives, and one of the purest and most virtuous of men, was, we are informed, bilious pleurisy; it attacked him on Monday, and so rapid was its progress that, although a man of robust frame; it terminated his life in forty-eight hours.

Mr. Williams entered Congress, a Representative from his native State of North Carolina, in December, 1815, and continued such, by repeated elections, to the day of his death, making an unbroken service of more than twenty-six years; a proof at once of his own fidelity to his trust and of the confidence of his constituents very rarely equalled in the history of our Government. He had long been what is termed "the Father of the House;" but notwithstanding that venerable title and the length of service it implied, he had reached the age of only fifty-six years. A sincere Christian, he was a man of the strictest morals, and one of the most conscientious and unswerving public servants whom we have ever known. Such, indeed, were his merits, public and personal, and such his eminent value as a Representative, that we look upon his death as a serious loss to the whole country, as well as to his immediate constituents.

Congress--The Funeral

The funeral solemnities of the Hon. Lewis Williams, for so many years one of the Representatives of the State of North Carolina, took place in the Representatives Hall, yesterday, at the appointed hour. The general esteem in which the deceased was held in this community, and the universal regret which his death has occasioned, drew an unusually large assemblage of the citizens of Washington, and others now at the seat of Government, as well as of the Members of the House, to witness the solemn and impressive scene. The galleries were crowded. But all audible conversation was suppressed; and over the whole assembly gathered to witness the ceremony an unwonted silence prevailed. Soon after twelve o'clock, the Committee of Arrangements entered the Hall, wearing white scarves, and followed by the Pall-bearers, and then by the Body, which was enclosed in a coffin covered with black velvet and having on it a plain silver plate bearing
The usual inscription. The North Carolina Representation followed, as mourners, in black scarves, and took the seats prepared for their reception, opposite to the bier, on the left. The Rev. Septimus Tuston, one of the Chaplains to Congress, assumed his place at the Clerk's table and immediately in front of the seats of the members. Then came the Chief Justice and Judges of the Supreme Court, preceded by the Officers of the Court; and shortly after, the Senate, headed by their President and Sergeant-at-Arms, the Member of the House rising and continuing on their feet until the Members of the co-ordinate Branch of the Legislature were seated in the places assigned them. Major General Scott and General Jones, of the Army, were present, and several members of the Diplomatic Corps evinced their respect to the deceased and to the Government by their personal attendance on the occasion.

The Chaplain then introduced the services by reading, in a deliberate, distinct, and reverential voice, the ninetieth Psalm; which was followed by a prayer eminently appropriate to the event that had, in so sudden and unlooked-for-a manner assembled in that Hall the several Departments of the Government. The Preacher then took, as the ground-work of the eloquent and impressive address which succeeded, the verse of the 8th chapter of Romans: "For I esteem the sufferings of this present time not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." After advertising to the very short time (scarcely a month) which had elapsed since he had been called to address many of the same auditors on a similar occasion, at which time he had dwelt on the gradual and certain decay which was the lot of fallen humanity in this world, he said he had now selected a theme of a more cheering character, viz. the bright and happy contrast in the condition of a Christian man before and after death; which he illustrated in a very just and suitable manner, with much earnestness, solemnity, and tenderness of feeling. Having contemplated the contrast referred to in his text under several different aspects, he came to the event which had recently occurred, and spoke of the deceased member in a manner peculiarly delicate and judicious, referring to the eloquent and touching eulogiums which had been pronounced upon his character in both Houses of Congress on the preceding day, and to the sketch there presented of his life and leading public services. The view on which he preferred to dwell had reference to his long, open, uniform, unpretending but consistent, and unblemished profession of the religion of Christ, on which he dilated with a soothing satisfaction. The discourse closed with a brief but affecting appeal to every one present to prepare for the change which awaits us all.

The religious services having terminated, the line of procession was taken up, in the order reported in the programme prepared by the Committee of Arrangements, and, proceeding out of the Hall and through the Rotundo, entered the carriages in waiting, which, wheeling in succession through the north gate of the Capitol square, formed in line on the broad road that leaves the southeast corner of the Capitol grounds; whence it moved on to the Congressional burying ground, where the body was deposited in the receiving vault, until a tomb, similar to those which mark the final resting place of so many deceased Members, can be prepared for its last earthly home.

Along the toiling ways of life
My footsteps come and go,
How sad to meet the dust and heat
Your heart may never know.
Ami, while I come and go;
Yet heaviest talk would seem but light,
Nor long the weariest ways.
If but my soul could win at last
The guerdon of your praise.
Aime, after long toiling days.
And I could climb the rockiest heights
Or tread the burning sand,

Williams, Esq., a well known lawyer of this city, died yesterday of typhoid fever. His death was unexpected although he has been ill for some days. Attending Mr. Williams death is a circumstance which well illustrates the really beneficial effect of Life Insurance Companies. A few months ago Mr. W. was applied to by an agent of a Life Insurance Company to have his life insured. He scoffed the idea and claimed that his chances for a long life were as good as those of any other of his acquaintances. He was eventually persuaded and had his life insured for $5,000, premium of $33 per quarter, to be paid quarterly. He has paid for but two quarters (all that was due) and now at his death his family receives the handsome sum of $5,000. |

Death of Mr. Zadok Williams
The venerable Mr. Zadok Williams, died last evening at the residence of his son, Joseph Z. Williams, 1314 3d street southeast. Mr. Williams had spent all the eighty-seven years of his life in this city, and was familiar with its early history, retaining a remarkably clear recollection of scenes and incidents of former years. Mr. Williams was born near Benning, February 15, 1805. His father, who served in the War of 1812, came to this city from Prince George's county, Md., in 1810, and located in East Washington. In 1814, when the British attacked this city, Mr. Williams remembered well when Commodore Tingey had the old Navy Yard bridge burned to keep the British from coming to the city. He also gathered with an old colored man many pieces of the old guns destroyed by the British at the marine barracks and placed them in an old lockup that stood near the navy yard gate. When quite a young man he learned the tailor business under Mr. Jewell in Georgetown and had made garments for many celebrated and distinguished persons of the day, among them Mr. E.W.P. Custis of Arlington, with whom he was personally acquainted. He owned from time to time much property in this section and also owned the famous "race course track," purchased from the late Mr. Thomas Blagden, and sold it to the United States government to form a part of the asylum tract, reserving the original race track, which he subsequently sold to private individuals. He married in 1828 Miss Edney Ann Denoon, by whom he had a large family. Two sons and three daughters survive him -- Mr. Joseph Z. Williams, Mr. George Williams, Mrs. Joseph Grinder, Mrs. Enoch M. Norris and Mrs. M.F Rue -- and many grandchildren and great grandchildren. Mrs. Williams died in July 1853, and he married a second time, Miss Mary Morton of Baltimore, Md., who died in July 1886, and left no family. Mr. Williams was up to a few years ago engaged in business. He was a member of the Oldest Inhabitants' Society and was the oldest parishioner of Christ Church, East Washington. The funeral will take place tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock from the late residence. The interment will be at Congressional cemetery.

Fatality at a Fire
A Brave Fireman Loses His Life in a Smoke Trap
The Janitor of a Building Also Has a Narrow Escape--
The Fire in the Basement of the Blau Building
At an early hour last evening there was a fatal fire in the Blau building, at the northwest corner of 14th and G streets. Considerable damage was also done to the building. Foreman Zadock Williams of the chemical engine lost his life through suffocation, and Edward Allen, the colored janitor, was found in an unconscious condition on the second floor of the burning building. It was about 5:30 o'clock when Correspondents Crounse and Bangs of the World bureau, which is located on the ground floor of the building on the 14th street side, discovered fire in the building. A telephone message soon brought the chemical engine to the scene of the fire. The flames had seemingly gained such headway that Foreman Williams ordered one of his men to have an alarm sounded, which brought several engine companies to the scene. It was difficult for a time to locate the fire and to get the streams of water upon it. Smoke issued in dense and suffocating volumes, apparently coming through the floor and walls of the World office. Finally the flames were reached in the rear of the basement beneath that office, where they had originated.

How Williams Died
While waiting for the arrival of the engine and truck companies, Foreman Williams went in the basement to operate his chemical extinguisher in hope of getting the fire well under control. His failure to return from that part of the burning building caused no great alarm, for his comrades thought of course that he was in a safe place, but in this they were mistaken, for the door leading to the particular part of the building in which the fire started, it appears, had closed on him, and he was confined there in the cloud of smoke unable to get out. Soon after the arrival of the engines the members of No. 1 company had flooded the basement. While Foreman Boss and others were working there in the dark, Foreman Boss stumbled over Williams' inanimate form. Foreman Williams was lying on the floor, with his face downward in six inches of water. When being carried to the pavement outside there was but little, if any, signs of life. The patrol wagon carried the unfortunate fireman quickly to the Emergency Hospital, but he was dead when the physicians there examined him. The deceased was in the building, it is thought, fully fifteen or twenty minutes before he was discovered.

The Janitor’s Narrow Escape
Soon after the finding of Foreman Williams, and when the fire was under control, one of the firemen found on the second floor, Edward Allen, the colored janitor, who had been cut off from escape by the smoke and heat. He was unconscious, but when taken to the Emergency Hospital his condition improved.

The origin of the fire could not be ascertained. The building is owned by Herman E. Blau. The real estate office of Banes & Simpson is on the first floor, adjoining the World office, while on the second floor is the office of John F. Waggaman, as is that of the Driggs Ordnance Company. The loss amounted to about $600, of which $400 was to the World office. The Lincoln and Columbia insurance companies will settle the bills.

The body of the dead fireman was taken to the engine house from the hospital, and later was removed to the late home of the deceased, No. 1218 G street southeast.

A Relief Fund
Soon after the flames had been extinguished a fund was started for the family of the deceased fireman, who was 26 years old, and who leaves a wife and child. Those who contributed to the fund were Banes & Simpson, $50; Herman E. Blau, $15; Charles G. Sloan, $10; Mr. Harrington, $10; Robert E. Morris and John F. Waggaman, $25.

Mr. Charles Simpson of the firm of Banes & Simpson will receive all contributions that may be made to the fund. The circumstances of the case are distressing, the little family being left completely destitute by the tragedy.

<td>Dr. Amos N. Williamson, a well-known physician of South Washington, died this morning at 10:30 o'clock, at his residence, No. 486 F street southwest, from a heart trouble. Dr. Williamson was about 56 years of age, and had resided here about 18 years, during which time he built up quite a large practice in South Washington, and he also practiced in the lower part of the old second ward, having had an office at No. 1002 C street northwest also. He was a native of North Carolina, and was at one time quite well to do there, but he lost nearly everything he owned during the war. He came here about 1866 with his family--a wife and several children, some of whom have since deceased--and settling in South Washington, by his strict attention to business and sociability, was soon well and favorably known.</td>

Williamson. On April 26, 1920, Katie, beloved wife of Walter Williamson in the 86th year of her age. Interment in Congressional Cemetery.

In addition to being one of the oldest residents, Mr. Williamson was one of the oldest active government employees in the District, having just completed his sixty-first year at the Government Hospital for the Insane. He was born in Baltimore, Md., on February 18, 1829. At the age of twenty-two he married Miss Annie Kline of that city. Sixty-one years ago he moved to the District and accepted a position at the government hospital, and he has held this position ever since, with the exception of three months during the civil war when he was stationed at the Capitol as a guard under the command of Dr. McKim. When Mr. Williamson entered St. Elizabeth's it was a small institution with about twenty inmates and in charge of Dr. Nichols, the first superintendent. It has now over 3,000 inmates.

At the time of his death and for many years previous Mr. Williamson was in charge of one of the larger shops and notwithstanding his advanced years he was at his work every day and it was only last Saturday that he complained of feeling badly and was required to give up his duties. He was eligible for a pension under the recent retirement act and had made out his papers with the hope of taking advantage of the new law. He was a man of unusual vigor and it was a frequent sight to see him running to catch a street car. He attributed his long life to systematic living.
About seventeen years ago his first wife died and a few years ago he married Mrs. Agnes Pumphrey, who survives him, as well as two sons, William A. and Thomas F. Williamson, and two daughters, Mrs. Hattie Nicholson of the District and Mrs. Carrie Eno, who resides in Iowa. Mr. Williamson was an active member of the Anacostia Methodist Episcopal Church during his entire residence in the District and he spent a greater portion of his spare time in assisting those with whom he came in contact, who were less fortunate than himself. The employees of the branch at the hospital of which he was in charge will close their shop on Monday out of respect to his memory and officials at the institution where he has worked so long and faithfully express deep regret at his death. In addition to serving under Dr. Nichols, he also served under Drs. Godding, Richardson and the present superintendent, Dr. William A. White.

The Washington Times, January 25, 1905
Death Claims Oldest Printer in the City
James B. Williamson Victim of Kidney Trouble--Demise is Accelerated by a Fall -- His Long and Useful Career
The funeral of James Brainard Williamson, eighty-seven years of age, who died on Monday at his home, 1009 Twelfth Street northwest, of acute kidney trouble, will be held tomorrow.
Requiem mass will be held at St. Patrick's Church at 9 o'clock. The services will be read by Father Carroll. The body will be buried in Congressional Cemetery, and pallbearers will be chosen from members of the Typographical Union, of which the deceased was a prominent member.
Mr. Williamson's death was accelerated by a fall on the ice a few days ago, when he seriously cut and bruised himself about the head.
James Brainard Williamson was born in Suffolk county, Va, in 1818. He learned the printer's trade, and in 1845 removed to Washington, where he obtained a position on the staff of the "National Intelligencer." Later he was connected with the "Evening Express," a local paper, which, after running about two months, failed.
Shortly after this he obtained a position in the Government Printing Office and remained there until a short time ago, when he was put on the superannuated list and transferred to the branch office in the Treasury Department. He was the oldest printer in the Government service, the oldest printer in the Typographical Union, and so far as is known the oldest working printer in the United States.
Mr. Williamson was very active in the unions to which he belonged, and every printer in the service had a good word for "Uncle Jimmie," as he was known to all of his friends and fellow employees.
The deceased is survived by a widow and three sons--Walter R., James M., and Albert P. Williamson--all businessmen of this city.

The Evening Star, March 6, 1893

Charles A.J. Williamson Dies at the Age of 92
For Thirty-One Years an Employee at Government Hospital for the Insane
Charles A.J. Williamson, ninety-two years old, died at his residence, 311 E street southeast, on Thursday, following a brief illness. Funeral services are to be held at his late home Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock, with interment in Congressional cemetery. Rev. Mr. Copes, pastor of the Anacostia Methodist Episcopal Church, and Rev. John E. Fort, pastor of Tenleytown Methodist Church, will officiate and the pallbearers will be selected from the membership of Mineola Tribe of Red Men, of which Mr. Williamson was a member.

In addition to being one of the oldest residents, Mr. Williamson was one of the oldest active government employees in the District, having just completed his sixty-first year at the Government Hospital for the Insane. He was born in Baltimore, Md., on February 18, 1829. At the age of twenty-two he married Miss Annie Kline of that city. Sixty-one years ago he moved to the District and accepted a position at the government hospital, and he has held this position ever since, with the exception of three months during the civil war when he was stationed at the Capitol as a guard under the command of Dr. McKim. When Mr. Williamson entered St. Elizabeth's it was a small institution with about twenty inmates and in charge of Dr. Nichols, the first superintendent. It has now over 3,000 inmates.

At the time of his death and for many years previous Mr. Williamson was in charge of one of the larger shops and notwithstanding his advanced years he was at his work every day and it was only last Saturday that he complained of feeling badly and was required to give up his duties. He was eligible for a pension under the recent retirement act and had made out his papers with the hope of taking advantage of the new law. He was a man of unusual vigor and it was a frequent sight to see him running to catch a street car. He attributed his long life to systematic living.
About seventeen years ago his first wife died and a few years ago he married Mrs. Agnes Pumphrey, who survives him, as well as two sons, William A. and Thomas F. Williamson, and two daughters, Mrs. Hattie Nicholson of the District and Mrs. Carrie Eno, who resides in Iowa. Mr. Williamson was an active member of the Anacostia Methodist Episcopal Church during his entire residence in the District and he spent a greater portion of his spare time in assisting those with whom he came in contact, who were less fortunate than himself. The employees of the branch at the hospital of which he was in charge will close their shop on Monday out of respect to his memory and officials at the institution where he has worked so long and faithfully express deep regret at his death. In addition to serving under Dr. Nichols, he also served under Drs. Godding, Richardson and the present superintendent, Dr. William A. White.

The Washington Times, January 25, 1905
Death Claims Oldest Printer in the City
James B. Williamson Victim of Kidney Trouble--
Demise is Accelerated by a Fall -- His Long and Useful Career
The funeral of James Brainard Williamson, eighty-seven years of age, who died on Monday at his home, 1009 Twelfth Street northwest, of acute kidney trouble, will be held tomorrow.

Requiem mass will be held at St. Patrick's Church at 9 o'clock. The services will be read by Father Carroll. The body will be buried in Congressional Cemetery, and pallbearers will be chosen from members of the Typographical Union, of which the deceased was a prominent member.

Mr. Williamson's death was accelerated by a fall on the ice a few days ago, when he seriously cut and bruised himself about the head.

James Brainard Williamson was born in Suffolk county, Va, in 1818. He learned the printer's trade, and in 1845 removed to Washington, where he obtained a position on the staff of the "National Intelligencer." Later he was connected with the "Evening Express," a local paper, which, after running about two months, failed.

Shortly after this he obtained a position in the Government Printing Office and remained there until a short time ago, when he was put on the superannuated list and transferred to the branch office in the Treasury Department. He was the oldest printer in the Government service, the oldest printer in the Typographical Union, and so far as is known the oldest working printer in the United States.

Mr. Williamson was very active in the unions to which he belonged, and every printer in the service had a good word for "Uncle Jimmie," as he was known to all of his friends and fellow employees.

The deceased is survived by a widow and three sons--Walter R., James M., and Albert P. Williamson--all businessmen of this city.

<td>Obituary--died in this city, on the 11th inst., after a protracted illness, which she endeavored, patiently to bear, Elizabeth Willis, aged 80 years. She was a native of Petersburg, Va., but for the last fifty years a resident of Washington City, D.C. Her hand was ever ready to relieve the distressed, and when disease prevailed she was among the first to proffer assistance, and the orphan particularly received her blessing. Many learned to love her as a mother and willingly sought her counsel. In her last moments she was faithfully attended and breathed her last surrounded by both children, grand children and great grand children. Oh! how her aged form will be missed in the family circle, for the little ones will think of grandma and sigh because they can see her face no more. Peace to her ashes! The National Intelligencer, Sudden and Appalling Death

A young man, named Charles Wilson, employed in the Coast Survey Office, died yesterday suddenly on Thursday morning, under the following painful circumstances. He was married on Wednesday night at Mrs. Little's boarding house. Mr. Wilson went to bed about 11 o'clock, and was found dead by his wife the next morning, when she attempted to awake him. Having taken a mixture on Wednesday evening, consisting of opium and ether, it was believed by many that this draught was the cause of his death. On a full investigation of this distressing case by a coroner's jury, they returned, after hearing the testimony of four eminent physicians and a post mortem examination, the following verdict:

"That the deceased was a man of intemperate habits, and had been, for two weeks previous to his death, constantly under the influence of ardent spirits, and on the night preceding the morning of his death he manifested strong symptoms of delirium tremens, and while in that state, about 10 o'clock at night, he was married and retired to bed about 11 o'clock; that, after he got in bed, he exchanged a few words with his wife, and then fell asleep, and was found dead in his bed on Thursday morning about light; and the jury believe, from the evidence, that the deceased came to his death by congestion of the brain and stomach, produced by the habitual use of intoxicating drinks."

Mr. Wilson was born in Kernstown, Frederick county, Va., May 8, 1826 and came to this city at the age of ten years. At the age of sixteen years he was appointed an apprentice in the machine department of the Washington navy yard under the supervision of the late eminent Engineer William Ellis. He was a member of the artillery company formed at the breaking out of the civil war for the defense of this city, but was temporarily relieved from duty as a soldier and appointed superintendent of machinery at the Washington navy yard, a position he held until 1886, when he was removed by Secretary Whitney, Mr. Wilson being a republican. He was afterward appointed superintendent of machinery under the bureau of ordnance. He was the inventor and patentee of the incline slide gun carriage, and it was his genius, it is said, that made the batteries of the New Ironside serviceable. He was a member of Farragut Post, G.A.R.

Mr. Wilson married Miss Charity Inch, sister of Rear Admiral Richard Inch, and the late Commodore Philip Inch, U.S.N. He was regarded as a man of strong character, honest and fair in all his dealings. He believed faithfully in the golden rule. His wife and two sons and four daughters survive him.

The Evening Star, July 14, 1859

A Dreadful Accident

This forenoon, between 10 and 11 o’clock, while the gunner’s crew at the Washington Navy Yard were engaged in their usual battery practice, a sixty-four pounder—an army gun—which had been fired once only there (though it had evidently been often fired before) burst, killing James Wilson and William Nokes. The former was a seafaring man, married with one child. The latter was a married man, and was preparing to become a gunner in the service. He leaves no children.

The accident also wounded ten men—eight severely and two slightly—as follows: Richard Gormley (cut about the head;) Charles Stuart (badly cut about the head;) Roderick McMillan, (collar-bone broken;) P. Ludwig, (splinter in the side;) Andrew Wilson (cut about the face and head;) J. Roach, (ditto;) Elijah Beacham (badly hurt;) Dennis Leary, John Conner, and John Holland (slightly hurt.)

Mr. Wilson was killed instantly, half his head being blown off; and Mr. Nokes lived but five or ten minutes after the accident; the lower part of his face and head was blown off. The force of the accident threw Mr. Wilson’s body a distance of thirty feet, and Mr. Nokes and Mr. Beachem ten or twelve feet. All who were injured were on the gun platform, which is elevated ten feet from the ground. Some of the fragments of the gun were cast more than two hundred yards, to the great danger of the workmen around.
At 1 p.m. the presence of the coroner to hold an inquest over the remains of Messrs. Wilson and Nokes (who were most estimable and valuable men in all their relations in life) was momentarily expected. Indeed, all the gunner’s crew are necessarily picked men.

Hopes of the recovery of all the wounded are entertained by Dr. A.W. Miller and the medical officers of the Yard in attendance.

Everything possible to relieve the condition of the wounded, has been done by the officers of the Yard.

The Navy Yard Tragedy -- Further Particulars

The whole community was shocked greatly by the unfortunate affair which occurred yesterday morning at the Navy Yard, and which resulted in the almost instantaneous death of two estimable men, and the serious injury of eight others, two of whom are fatally wounded, it is feared. The two dead men were placed in boxes lined with lead, and packed in ice, and put under a proper guard in the western ship house, near the scene of the accident, with the national banner thrown over them. A crowd of sympathizing friends collected in and about the building, remained there for hours, and until the arrival of the Coroner, discussing and lamenting the dreadful circumstances which had sent their two companions thus suddenly into eternity. The scene of the accident also possessed a sad attraction for many others, who viewed with horror the wide-scarttered fragments of the battery, and the bloody traces upon the surrounding ruins, where the killed and wounded had been thrown by the force of the explosion.

About twenty-five feet from the elevated platform where the gun stood, and in a western line from it lay the largest detached portion of the gun. Its pathway to the place where it lay was easily traceable. It had carried away in its flight the roof of the low battery on its right, and converting the entire structure into a perfect wreck, had lighted upon the top of a gun on the lower battery, making an indentation in the solid iron nearly large enough for a man’s fist to lay in; it then took a slide downwards splintering the carriage of the gun in its descent, and imbedded itself in the hard ground at the extreme western end of and just outside the battery. This piece of metal cannot weigh less than 4,000 lbs. Two other pieces—one weighing probably 2,000 lbs., and another still smaller—were thrown eastwardly about seventy-five yards, passing in their flight immediately over the roof of the eastern lower battery, and finally resting on the wharf, within a short distance of the water. At the right of the elevated battery hung the mass of splintered timbers and twisted irons of the gun carriage. The stout oak timbers had been riven into fine splinters., Upon the platform lay broken couplings, the displaced and broken carriage ways, and the forward portion of the gun, which rested in the port-hole of the battery, the broken edges blackened and scorched by the gunpowder. The awning which had protected the gunners in their practice from the rays of the sun, was torn into shreds and blown in all directions and to a great distance.

The Wounded

The wounded, as fast as discovered, were conveyed out of the Yard to their own homes, where they were immediately cared for by the Surgeon of the Yard, and various physicians who had repaired to the spot at the first intelligence of the tragedy. The Officers of the Yard, and all others who could be of service to the unfortunate sufferers, administered all the aid in their power towards their relief.

The Inquest

On the arrival of Coroner Woodward, a jury was empannelled (as follows) to investigate the circumstances of the death of the two deceased: Thompson Van Reswick, J.M. Padgett, Wm. L. Ross, J.F. King, James Cull, Thomas Plumsell, Wm. Beron, J.M. Busher, A.F. Berry, Charles Kimble, Thomas A. Golson, John Brower. The jurors having been sworn in both cases and examined the dead bodies, proceeded to the Centre house, the officers of the Commodore and other officers, where they heard the testimony of the eye witnesses.

Captain John A. Dahlgren having been sworn, testified that the gun which burst was a 64-pound cannon, one of the regular guns of the service, which had been sent to him by the bureau, bearing all the marks of inspection and acceptance for the use of the U.S. Navy. The marks of the inspecting officered showed the gun to have been accepted as in every way reliable for the use of Government, after the usual proofs of its capacity. Witness had no reason whatever to apprehend danger from the firing of it, as it had been fired but twenty-five times before the time when it burst. It had been discharged but twice today. It was loaded with the regular service charge of 16 pounds of powder and a solid 64-pound shot. This morning the usual order had been passed for the usual practice, and one shot had been fired to see if it was all right. It was loaded a second time with due and full observance of all the preliminaries and with all of the usual care in every particular, when it was discharged it burst, with the result already related. Witness had placed picked and careful men, as usual, in charge of it and is entirely satisfied that every care was practiced, and the record of the clerk shows this fact, and that the bursting may be attributed to accident alone, which no one could have foreseen or avoided. Every time a gun is discharged a record is kept of every particular. The charge is weighed and gauged, and sent home, and the shot is always in its right place before the gun is discharged.

This must be so, for the man who rams the charge home has spaces marked on his rammer, and when the charge is ramed home he observes the mark on the rod and calls it out to the clerk, who records it, and if it varies in the least from what the record calls for the fact is instantly detected. The gun having been fired but twenty-six times it was not inspected before using it, as the service requires every gun to be warranted to stand one thousand rounds, and it is never usual to examine a gun till it has been fired at least fifty times. Mr. Norton was present and duly recorded as usual every detail of the loading of the gun, and this record is before the jury for their inspection precisely as made. Mr. Boarman, the foreman of gunners, has been with witness ever since he commenced firing guns. He has been foreman ten years, and is one of the most thorough gunners in the service, and perfectly trustworthy. A gun of this kind should stand at least eight hundred rounds without bursting. This gun was about nine years old. It was cast in 1850, at the West Point foundry. Could not have been accepted by the Bureau nor paid for had it not been properly inspected and proved.

Mr. R.A. Boarman testified that he was present at the firing of the gun. That previous to her being fired she had been loaded in the usual manner, with an entire observance of all the cautious requisite; that at the second round she exploded, and the first thing witness saw after that was Wilson, who was blown directly through the air before witness’s face to a point some forty feet distant. Witness next saw Nokes lying on another man whom witness supposed also to be dead. Witness ran to the opposite side of the gun and saw Gormley and others wounded. Spoke to Mr. Thompson about taking away the killed and wounded. Witness then ran to the assistance of such of them as required aid. Witness is entirely satisfied that there was no negligence in loading or firing the gun, and that any neglect or mistake would be instantly detected. Witness can only account for the accident by supposing that the metal of the gun was bad. It was one of those tidings which no man could foresee or avoid. Witness knows that she was a new gun, and that she was well fortified; and is entirely satisfied that she exploded through accident, and not from any known cause. There were thirteen men on the battery at the time, and they were ranged about the gun precisely the same way they would have been had they been on board ship at close quarters.

John Holmes testified that he was present, but was so stunned by the explosion that he saw nothing of it. Saw the gun loaded, and it was regularly charged, in every respect. Witness thinks there could not by any possibility, have been carelessness in the matter.

A.C. Sterrett stated that he was present on the battery when the gun exploded; was standing at the after eccentric and saw it charged. All the usual precautions were taken in loading it that are usual in the service. The cartridge was weighed by Mr. Ludwick; it was sent home to the chamber; and the shot (a solid 64-pound one) was also in its right place, as the gauge on the ram-rod showed. When the gun was discharged the first time today, she recoiled more than usual, and remarks were made by the men about it. None, however, apprehended the least danger. The extra recoil was caused by the compressures not being sufficiently secured, and when she was again loaded, a breeching was placed on her to assist the compressures. Witness does not think any word was sent to the captain about apprehended danger from the gun on account of the unusual recoil. There may have been, but witness was not privy to it, if such was the fact.

Richard Gormley testified that he was not at the gun when she was fired the first time; the first discharge was between 9 and 10 o’clock a.m., and witness was then on the look-out; at the second discharge, which was between 9 and 10 o’clock, witness was ordered to the battery, and took his stand on the port side of the gun, near the forward compressure; witness never apprehended the slightest danger; there was not a man there but what would have left the battery instantly had any danger been suspected; the order was given to fire, and the gun snapped; at the second snap, however, the gun exploded, and witness was knocked entirely off the battery by the shock and rendered senseless; witness remembers no more until he recovered consciousness in the dispensary whither they had taken him; witness heard that Capt. Dahlgren had been notified of the battery by the shock and rendered senseless; witness remembers no more until he recovered consciousness in the dispensary whither they had taken him; witness heard that Capt. Dahlgren had been notified of the unusual recoil of the gun; heard Wilson say that the usual recoil of this gun should be three feet, and that the charge been out of its place in any degree, it would have been had they been on board ship at close quarters.

Capt. Dahlgren (recalled) stated that this gun had been on the lower battery, and had followed on the practice batter’s 11-inch Dahlgren. The slide was a 10-inch one, and of course was shorter than a 11-inch slide. This circumstance made the recoil seem greater, because it brought the breech back against the cross-piece of the slide. Witness was informed by Mr. Norton of this circumstance, and ordered a breeching to be placed upon the gun, which was done. The recoil of a gun depends on a variety of circumstances. This gun had been, when on the lower battery, placed on rough pine skids, where of course the recoil would be much less than it would be on metallic slides. There would be no connection between the recoil of a gun and the cause which would burst it. The only cause for the bursting in this case, that witness could think of, would be that the metal was bad. Witness thinks this the worst gun he ever saw, as it would be supposed to stand the usual number of rounds (1,000), and it is never considered necessary to examine a gun after it is proved, until at least fifty rounds are fired from it.

A.B. Norton testified that at the time the gun was discharged he was standing in his proper place to note the particulars of the discharge. That the gun emitted a peculiar sound, which went to the rear and in the air instead of, out of the muzzle of the gun. On the instant witness heard a sharp, cracking, rushing sound, and on looking in the direction saw the carriage going over the side of the battery. Saw the men lying around wounded, and thought that three of them were killed, as one had, fallen upon another at some distance from the gun. Ran to their assistance. The loading and all that pertains to the loading of a gun was conducted with as much caution as witness ever knew to be used. There was nothing omitted nor anything overdone, every particular of the loading was duly recorded by witness, and there was no cause to apprehend an explosion. When the charge was rammed home the ramrod showed it to be 105 inches, and this was called out to witness, who recorded it. The man, in calling it out, did not even stop to think whether this gauge was the same as at previous times. After the accident, witness compared this gauge with that recorded when the gun was first used, years ago, and found it to be registered 105. This shows that the charge was in its place. Witness has been present before when the gun has been fired twenty-four times. She was never fired, except twice at the foundry where she was made, but what witness was present and recorded her every round. The recoil of a gun depends upon the condition of the carriage, its smoothness, and unusual recoil would never be taken as an indication that a gun was about to explode. The first shot fired today was fired to see if the gun was all right for the practice to go on. Witness informed Captain Dahlgren of the unusual recoil, and received orders to have a breeching placed on her. The powder was such as has been approved for use in the service. Witness saw it weighed by Ludwick, who was badly wounded by the accident. Each cartridge is weighed and put up in the magazine, and immediately before being placed in a gun is again weighed, to be certain that there is nothing wrong. (In answer to a question of one of the jurors.) It would be almost impossible for any fulminate from the laboratory to find its way into the magazine, and the man who would attempt to effect such a collusion for malicious purposes would himself be in imminent danger of being blown up.

Capt. Dahlgren (recalled) gave further information about the care used by the Bureau in the selection and acceptance of all guns for the service, the manner of inspecting and proving them. The inspection is conducted by the officer with the greatest care and precision, and if everything is found to be right, the initials of the inspecting officer are stamped on the trunnion of the gun, and the letter P underneath them, showing that the gun has been duly proved. There is no possibility of ascertaining anything more about a gun than is ascertained by means of this rigid inspection and proof; and if the metal is bad, or if some unknown flaw is there, it cannot by any possibility be detected. Witness would never think of inspecting a gun warranted to stand one thousand rounds, which had only been discharged twenty-six times. This gun was weak, and that is all that can be said about it. The maker is one of the best gun-makers in the country, and has the highest reputation before the Bureau. There are no better guns than those made at the West Point Foundry, where this was made.

Mr. Wm. H. Thompson gave further testimony as to the extreme precaution always used in the laboratory and in the magazine and confirmed the testimony of Mr. Norton, that it would be impossible by any sort of collusion to introduce fulminate into a cartridge; it could only be done in taking the cartridge from the powder-cart to weigh it immediately before charging the gun, and these would be attended with the greatest danger. In this case, the man who weighed the powder, (Ludwick) was on the platform when the gun was discharged, and dreadfully wounded.

[A cartridge shot and primer, such as are used in the 64-pounder guns was here brought to the jury, who stood around the table while Captain Dahlgren went through a minute description of the manner in which the guns are loaded and discharged.]

The Killed

James H. Wilson was a man about thirty-five years old, who never had any knowledge of who his parents were, and had no relative that he knew of in the world. He was partially raised in Brooklyn, N.Y., and has been in the United States service here about nine years. He was a man of unusual abilities, and stood high in the service as an expert and intelligent gunner. He has been for years the keeper of the battery, and he was universally esteemed by his mates and by the officers.

Nokes was a young man, new in the service; had but been in the Paraguay expedition in the character of yeoman. He had been placed in the gunner’s department about two weeks ago, on account of the fair promise he gave, under the observation of Capt. Dahlgren, of becoming a first class gunner in time.
It was rumored yesterday that the wives of both of the deceased were absent from home on an excursion at the time of the accident. Such was not the case, they both being at their homes. It is understood that every effort will be made by the officers of the yard to have their afflicted families, who are poor, properly provided for by the Department.

The Wounded Today
At ½ o’clock p.m., today, our reporter visited Charles Stuart, J. Roche, R. McMullen, and Elijah Beacham, the four most seriously wounded men of yesterday’s accident.

Stuart was suffering greatly with severe spinal injuries, but was on the whole doing well.

Roche, McMullen and Beacham are in one room at their boarding house, and at the time of the visit were as easy as could be expected, though apparently in great suffering.

Roche is severely wounded about the breast and head, and his eyes are rendered nearly sightless. The attending physician speaks confidently of the restoration of the sight of one eye, but has not yet decided upon the other. He was asleep, and apparently in great pain, as was evinced by unnatural murmurings and nervous motions of his limbs.

McMullen had his collar-bone broken in two places, and very severe injuries about the head, one side of which is badly scalped. The broken bone has not yet been set, and though cheerful, the patient suffers extremely.

Beacham lies in a somewhat critical condition from internal injuries. The physician speaks hopefully of all the wounded, so that there is no present fear of their injuries taking a fatal issue.

Ludwig and Andrew Wilson are both doing well.

At 1 o’clock the hands employed in the yard answered to the roll call, and were then dismissed, to give them an opportunity of attending the funeral of the killed, which takes place this afternoon, at 4 o’clock.
Jeremiah DeBell Wilson, a resident of Washington for twenty-three years, and one of Mosby’s confederate rangers, died at 7:15 o’clock last evening at his home, 1333 12th street northwest at the age of seventy-five years.

A general physical breakdown, due to advanced age, was the cause of death. His last illness lasted about four weeks.

Mr. Wilson was the owner and rider of the famous black mare referred to repeatedly by Col. Mosby in his memoirs as the finest mount in the Confederate army. Repeated attempts were made to capture this horse by the Federal soldiers. Many a Confederate officer tried to buy her, but all to no purpose.

Lee in Search of Mount
On the occasion of the "greenback raid" by Mosby's men, Mr. Wilson was absent, and therefore he did not share in the rich booty secured on that jaunt.

A few days later his companions tried to get him to sell his famous mount to Gen. Lee, who was in search of a good horse. Her owner said he would do so if each of the men who had made a haul of about $20,000 each in greenbacks, would give him $100.

The men would not consent to this. So Mr. Wilson rode his mare to the end of the war, afterward selling her for a good figure to the rector of St. Dominick's Catholic Church of this city.

Mr. Wilson was several times captured by the Federal troops and each time escaped with is horse.

Dairyman After War
For a number of years after he came to this city Mr. Wilson was engaged in the dairy business. He had retired at the time of his death.

Funeral services will be held over his remains Monday morning at 10 o'clock in the chapel at Congressional cemetery. The pallbearers will be Mahlon Hooff, Hammond Hoof, Willis Robinson and Stephen Baker.

He leaves a wife, formerly Miss Harriet Brown, whom he married forty-three years ago. Both he and his wife were born in Fauquier county, Va. Three children, Mrs. P.H. Hooff, Miss Hattie Wilson and William B. Wilson, and six grandchildren, also survive him.

To Perform Autopsies
Bodies of Aged Couple Removed From Cemetery
John L. Wilson and His Wife Died Within Few Days of Each Other
Coroner Nevitt and Detective Evans have been conducting an investigation into the circumstances surrounding the deaths of John L. Wilson, a retired ornamental ironworker, and Mary B. Wilson, his wife, and tomorrow the bodies of the couple will be taken from Congressional cemetery to the morgue where Deputy Coroner Glazebrock will perform autopsies to determine the cause of their deaths. Both died at their house, 216 Delaware Avenue northeast.
Mrs. Wilson, who was sixty-eight years old, died the 10th instant, and her body was interred in Congressional cemetery last Friday. Mr. Wilson, who was seventy-eight years old, died last Sunday. Arrangements were made to bury his body yesterday but an investigation has been suggested by Dr. John Reid Shannon, pastor of the Metropolitan Memorial Church, and it was deemed advisable to place the body in the receiving vault.

Permits for the removal of the bodies from the cemetery to the morgue were issued this afternoon by Health Officer Woodward and the work will be done under the supervision of the superintendent of the cemetery and the morguemaster. Dr. S.S. Lamb of the Army Medical Museum will be present at the autopsy in the interest of Mrs. Isabelle Duval, 456 Maryland avenue southwest, sister of Mrs. Wilson.

The investigation conducted by the coroner and detectives, they say, convinced them there was no reason to suspect that poisoning or any other violence lay behind the deaths.

The estate of the couple is valued at about $40,000. Three thousand eight hundred dollars in cash was found between the mattresses of their bed. They also left some jewelry. The money and jewelry have been turned over to Dr. L.L. Frederich, 329 East Capitol street, who was not only the attending physician, but also, father-in-law of Lester Harris, one of the beneficiaries under a will made by Mr. Wilson about twenty years ago.

The other beneficiary is John Demaine, a clerk in the office of the secretary to the board of education. They are grandsons of Mr. Wilson.

Coroner Nevitt has directed that a jury be summoned to hear the testimony Friday morning at the morgue. Attorney George Hoover will be in attendance as the representative of some of the interested persons and a lively session is anticipated. Many witnesses will be summoned by the police and the facts will be thoroughly ventilated.

Inquest Into Deaths of Mr. and Mrs. John L. Wilson
"We believe from the evidence that has been submitted that nothing irregular was committed."

That was the verdict rendered by a coroner's jury this afternoon at the close of an investigation of the circumstance surrounding the death of Mr. and Mrs. John L. Wilson, the elderly couple who died recently at their home, 216 Delaware avenue northeast.

More than a dozen witnesses appeared at the morgue to give testimony at the inquest.

Deputy Coroner Glazebrook, who performed the autopsies, testified that the death certificates given by Dr. L.L. Friederick, who attended the couple, were accurate.

Mrs. Isabel Duvall, sister of Mrs. Wilson, testified that she had had no suspicion of foul play, but as the couple had died within such a short time of each other she had thought an autopsy should be performed.

_Sudden Death_
_The Evening Star, August 2, 1859_
We regret to record the death of Mathew Wilson, aged about fifty years, this morning about ten o'clock at the house of Andrew Hancock, Esq. For several days he had been complaining of chronic diarrhea, but no thought until this morning was entertained of his sudden exit from this world of toil. He died in peace and sensible to the last moment; and it may be a source of pleasure to his relatives to know that in his last moments he had the best medical attendance and the kind care of the family of Mr. Hancock. He was a printer by trade and during his residence in Washington had endeared himself to many friends.

_At First the Man Was Unknown, Afterward Found to be O.V. Wilson_
Last night as Anacostia car, No. 4, was going eastward on M street south a young man of perhaps twenty years, evidently from his dress a laborer, boarded it just east of the bridge over James creek, and supported himself by grasping the knob of the door. When between South Capitol and Half streets southeast he was observed to totter and before some one could catch him he fell off the car. The driver immediately put on the brakes, stopped the car and he was taken aboard. At 3d street Officer Cecils of the fifth precinct was called and the case reported to him. Dr. Combs was summoned and he at once pronounced the man dead. No one seemed to know him, and his body was taken to the morgue. It was at first supposed that he was struck by the car, but the probabilities are that he was overcome and died from the effects of the heat.

The body was identified as that of Oliver V. Wilson, formerly employed as a conductor on the Anacostia street railroad. He was 23 years old and resided at the house of his father, Martin V. Wilson, No. 921 C street southwest. The coroner investigated the case today.

Condition of Capt. McCathran
Was Arranging Funeral of Friend When Stricken
The condition of Capt. Frank F. McCathran, in command of the fifth police precinct, who suffered a cerebral hemorrhage while in the vicinity of the eastern market yesterday, was slightly improved this morning. At the time he was taken ill he was on his way to the home of the late Samuel A. Wilson, a retired policeman, whose death occurred last Tuesday afternoon at 221 8th street southeast.

Capt. McCathran and Mr. Wilson had been close personal friends for many years and during the last illness of the latter he expressed a desire to have the former take charge of his funeral. It was for that purpose that the captain was on his way to the 8th street house yesterday.

Mr. Wilson was a native of Ireland, where he was born the 16th of September, 1835. At the age of twenty years he was naturalized in Chicago. He came to this city later and received an appointment as a member of the police force after he had been employed about the city as a watchman. Most of his police duty was performed in the southeast section of the city. When he became too old for active street duty he was assigned with the humane society in charge of the work of looking after children, and later he was detailed at the house of detention.

During the time he was connected with the police department Mr. Wilson gained the respect and confidence of a host of substantial business men and others. He was never known to neglect his duty and his superior officers always expressed the greatest confidence in him. The remains will be interred in Congressional cemetery.

Woman Dies in Lodgings
Husband and Wife Had Been Drinking Heavily
Both Had Taken Paraldehyde to Quiet Nerves and Woman Got Overdose

The police of the first precinct found a sad condition of affairs in the boarding house of Mr. Hess, No. 618 9th street northwest, about 9 o'clock last night, where they were called in response to a summons from the keeper of the house. Mrs. Sarah A. Wilson was found dead in bed, and her husband, Richard J. Wilson, a printer, employed in the government printing office, was in a stupor. Her body was removed to the morgue, while the sick man was taken to the Emergency Hospital for treatment. A bottle found in the room, in which was a small quantity of paraldehyde, explained the condition of affairs, and the finding of a number of empty whisky flasks satisfied the police that Wilson had stated the facts when he said he and his wife had been drinking to excess.

The paraldehyde, Wilson explained, had been taken for the purpose of quieting their nerves and putting them to sleep. He expressed the belief that his wife had taken an overdose accidentally and not with suicidal intent.

About six months ago Richard J. Wilson and Sarah A. Connell were married and the couple boarded at the 9th street house, where Wilson had lived as a bachelor. It is stated that the Wilsons had been drinking heavily for several days, and the conclusion of the spree was not altogether a surprise, although death had not been anticipated.

Husband Summons Help
It was about 7 o'clock last night when Wilson called at the door of a room occupied by Mrs. Rasky. He was clad only in his night garments. His physical condition was such, however, that he scarcely realized anything beyond the fact that his wife was dead. Mr. Hess was summoned, and a doctor, who was visiting the house, was also called. He found that the woman's body was still warm, but life was extinct.
The man was hurried to the Emergency Hospital, where he was given prompt treatment, and Deputy Coroner Glazebrook directed that the woman's body be taken to the morgue. Dr. Glazebrook was satisfied, from statements he heard, that her death was the result of an overdose of paraldehyde taken accidentally. Paraldehyde, it is stated, is a poison that has about the same effect as laudanum, although it is even more dangerous, and is not generally used because it is expensive.

James B. Wimer Dies Here at 91
Attended Lincoln's Inauguration Ball -- Was Attached to Signal Service
James Buchanan Wimer, 91, who attended President Lincoln's inaugural ball, died today at the home of his daughter, Miss Marie E. Wimer, 1922 Belmont road.

Wilmer came to this city at 10 and finished his education here. Later he was attached to the Signal Service as a civilian employee and then became one of the principal developers of the Columbia Heights section. For approximately 30 years he conducted a real estate office, retiring 20 years ago.

Wilmer prided himself on having attended Lincoln's inaugural ball, and told many stories of the Civil War. He was a member and at one time a senior vestryman of St. Margaret's Episcopal Church.

His wife, Mrs. Mary Noal Wimer, died 15 years ago, and a daughter, Miss Martha E. Wimer, a teacher of French in the public schools here for 30 years, died last year. Surviving are the daughter with whom he lived, who conducts a business on Connecticut avenue; another daughter, Mrs. James Rohrer of Rio Bamba, Ecuador, and a son, Albert Wilmer of Flint, Mich.

James B. Wimer
The wonderful development and progress which Washington has experienced during the last quarter of a century, and which has made out of a city "without streets" one of the most beautiful cities in the world, is to a very large degree due to the energy and enterprise of its real estate brokers, who allow no opportunity to pass which might contribute to the beautifying and enlargement of the nation's capital. To accomplish this end, it was necessary that the men who bought, sold and exchanged real estate in the District of Columbia not only have ample means at their disposal, but it required men of foresight, conservatism and close attention to business. Mr. James B. Wimer is one of the few in Washington who has been in the real estate business for about twenty years and has devoted his entire time and best efforts to the interest of his clients, and who by doing this with exceptional fidelity and conservatism is one of those who have added to the valuation of Washington's real estate. His commodious and well-equipped offices are at 1201 G street northwest, where he conducts a general real estate brokerage business, and combines with it, loans and insurance. Mr. Wimer was born in Philadelphia, Pa., on March 6, 1845. His father was James Wimer, who was closely identified with the early journalism of Washington, being the editor and one of the proprietors of a small sheet, The American Telegraph, started March 25, 1851, which turned out to be the foundation of the present Evening Star.

Mr. Wimer received a business education at Gonzaga College and also took a course at the old Columbian College. In 1869 he entered the government service in which he held a number of responsible positions. In 1883 he left the government service and embarked in the real estate business, and shortly after that time took particular interest in that portion of Washington which is now called Washington Heights. He exercised every effort in the accomplishment of the extension of Connecticut avenue over Washington Heights, ensuring for that part of the city by his untiring energy and perseverance the beautiful section which it is today. Mr. Wimer is at this time, and has been since its reorganization, a director of National Metropolitan Bank, a director of the District Title Insurance Company, and is a director of the National Union Fire Insurance Company. He is a member of the Board of Trade, the Real Estate Exchange, and a number of other organizations. Although taking an active part in everything that pertains to the welfare of the city and its inhabitants, Mr. Wimer has never solicited public honors. His entire time is devoted to his business and interests of his numerous clients. Mr. Wimer lives on Wyoming avenue, in a handsome residence, in the original Washington Heights sub-division. He is one of the founders and continuous workers in St.
Margaret's Episcopal Church on Connecticut Avenue Heights, being the senior warden therein, from its beginning to the present time, and has exhibited a spirited interest in all that pertains to the good of our people and city.

Chinese Funeral
Lee Fun Wing Laid to Rest With Appropriate Honors

All that was mortal of Lee Fun Wing was put in a grave in Congressional cemetery yesterday, there to remain until the body can be resurrected and taken to China. Wing was only about 35 years old, and his death was due to consumption. He had recently lived at 330 Pennsylvania avenue, where he died. At the grave the Chinese burial services were participated in by relatives of the deceased, and there was the usual fire made of the dead man's effects, and Chinese punk, white wine and eatables were placed on the grave to tempt the evil spirits.

Lee Fun Wing was popular in the Chinese colony, and he had a much larger funeral than most Chinamen have had in this city. While Undertaker J. Wm. Lee was the one who furnished the casket and arranged for the carriages, the celestials made all their own arrangements and notified the undertaker of the time of the funeral only a short time before they were ready to start.

Where Moy Was Buried Beside Three of His Countrymen -- Quantities of Oil and Incense Consumed Before the Casket Is Consigned to Earth with Various Articles of Food.

Moy Wing, the Chinaman who shuffled off this mortal coil a few days ago as the result of too much opium, was buried yesterday afternoon in Congressional Cemetery beside three other of his countrymen who have died in Washington. Moy was not buried with the pomp and splendor that usually characterizes the funerals of the Mongolians. The ceremonies at the grave were about the same as those generally employed, but the procession to the cemetery, the beating of tom-toms, the burning of incense enroute, and the scattering of small bits of paper, so that the deceased might find his way back, were omitted.

Several of his brethren, including his two brothers, who are in the laundry business, and Philip, the fat Chinaman who presides over the Chinese restaurant on Pennsylvania avenue, gathered at Lee's undertaking establishment, where the body was removed from the deadroom of the Emergency Hospital, about 3 o'clock. The body was borne to a hearse in the street and about fifteen Chinamen were bundled into three carriages and the procession moved directly to the Congressional Cemetery. No time was lost en route, and when the procession reached the part of the city adjacent to the cemetery it was evident that the children and curious persons of the neighborhood had heard of its approach, for hundreds of them were waiting on the sidewalks and started on a run after the procession and followed it to the cemetery. A great many were admitted to the cemetery, but the very small children had to content themselves with standing at the gate and peeping in.

Many Mysterious Packages
A space around the grave had been shut off by ropes, and around this was gathered a large crowd of men, women, and children, anxious to see the peculiar rites which are performed at the grave of a Chinaman. They were very orderly throughout the ceremony, but could not refrain from making inquiries of their neighbors about the meaning of certain ceremonies. The body was borne to the grave by four Celestials and placed on supports directly above the opening. It was in a plain casket and the top was tightly screwed on and never opened at the grave. The Chinamen then gathered at the foot of the casket and began to unwrap some of the many packages they carried. Moy's two brothers and Philip, who had prepared the delicacies for the nourishment of the deceased on his journey, officiated, and the others stood by watching and occasionally offering a suggestion or making a correction.

It was evident that there were certain differences between them regarding the right and proper course to pursue in the ceremonies, and when one of the managers would go wrong a Chinaman would step out from the bunch and perform the ceremony himself. One of Moy's brothers is a confirmed cigarette fiend, and had a lighted cigarette in his mouth during the entire ceremonies, and when it went out once or twice he would light it again from the sticks of incense burning at the foot of the grave.

The first bundle that was unwrapped contained two capons on separate dishes, baked and browned to a turn by the masterful Philip. The giblets were arranged around the chickens, and these were placed side by side at Poured Oil on the Flames

After the many bundles of incense, some that looked like firecrackers, were unwrapped and the firecracker-looking ones were lit from a fire that had been kindled from a bit of the oil poured over some paper and laid at the foot of the grave. The other sticks of incense were stuck upright in bunches in the ground that had been previously prepared by pouring the oil from one of the little dishes upon it. As fast as the dishes were emptied of their contents they were refilled out of the little teapots. Finally all of the incense was burning merrily and one of Moy's brothers made a circle about the fire, from which it had been lighted with oil from the pots, and another fire was kindled of the wrappings that had come around the incense. This was also twice circled with the oil and every scrap of paper that had contained anything used at the burial, and even the market basket in which the stuff was brought, was burned in this fire with the single exception of a single sheet of wrapping paper, which was dropped into the open grave.

Word was then given that the body was ready for burial, and after it was lowered into the grave a bundle composed of the deceased's clothes, his beloved pipe and all other things he was fond of, including cigarettes, were thrown upon the top of the coffin. A brother then threw in a few clods of earth, and as the grave was being filled, the food dishes, pots of oil and all were dropped into it and the Chinamen then got into the carriages and were driven back to the city. Not a word was spoken except the directions to one another, but after all the articles had been thrown into the grave, one of the Chinamen opened a bag of Chinese candy, half sugar and half salt, and passed it around. This meant that they were having a good time.

The money for Moy to pay his passage over the Styx with was in a purse in the bundle of clothes thrown into the grave and according to the best calculations he will reach the other shore in exactly six days.

Moy Sue Wing Dead
Popular Chinaman Succumbs To Heart Disease
Will Be Buried in Congressional Cemetery on Date Not Yet Selected

Moy Sue Wing is dead and his place of business at 235 4 1/2 street southwest is closed. The laundry business was conducted by Moy and his partner under the name of Hop Sing. Moy died suddenly yesterday afternoon about 1:30 o'clock and Coroner Nevitt saw his body later in the day. A certificate showing that the Chinaman's death had resulted from natural causes was given by the coroner, and the body was taken to the undertaking establishment of J.W. Lee, 332 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, to be prepared for burial. When the body will be taken to Congressional cemetery for interment has not yet been determined. The arrangements will not be made until a cousin of the deceased in Chicago is heard from. It is said that the marriage name of the dead man is Moy Sue Wing, but his fellow Chinamen say that his real name is Moy Shun. South Washington people, who patronize his laundry, knew him as Hop Sing.

Whatever his name may have been he is dead, and brothers and cousins by the score, are left to mourn his loss. There is nothing in the conduct of some of them to indicate mourning, however, but they are displaying some anxiety about his $600 bank account.

"We can't bury him till we get the money," one of them said to a Star reporter today, "but Lawyer Ambrose will get it for us and we will send what is left to Mrs. Wing and her four children in China."

Moy belonged to the local Chinese lodge of Freemasons. He did not attend any Sunday school in this city, but professed to be a Christian when he lived in Chicago. He was about 55 years old, and had been in this country nearly thirty years, during which time he paid two visits to China to see his wife and children. Fifteen years of this time he spent in this city. Had he lived until next year it was his intention to have returned to his native country for the last time. He had symptoms of tuberculosis, and although nearly dead he remained at his work in his laundry and sent to their owners the clothes he had handled.

Prepared His Noon Meal

Yesterday morning he ironed clothes until about 11 o'clock, and then he prepared his dinner. When his noon meal had been eaten a customer called and Moy found himself too weak to make change. He was in the act of opening the money drawer when he fell against the counter and expired. His death was due to heart failure, and a certificate to this effect was given. Coroner Nevitt says the man's condition indicated that he also had consumption. The coroner's attention was called to the habit many Chinamen have of taking a mouthful of water and sprinkling their laundry with it. Such a practice on the part of a Chinaman suffering from consumption, the coroner stated, would undoubtedly infect the garments. It is a matter, he thought, which might easily be remedied by the authorities. The practice, he stated, is a dangerous one, and ought to be stopped.

Known as "Good Man"

In "Chinatown" Moy was looked upon as a "good man," and those who knew him well say he was never known to sit at a fan-tan table or participate in gambling games of any kind. A cousin of the deceased, who related the circumstances of his death, seemed to regard the life and demise of Moy as a huge joke.

"He was a good man," the cousin said, "but he was stingy. He would rather work than eat, 'cause he get money for his family when he worked and was paying it out when he eat."

"Yesterday," he said, showing more amusement as he proceeded, "Moy worked, and it was Sunday. He didn't care about Sunday just so he was making money. Then he went in the back room and cooked his own dinner. He eat dinner, smoke pipe and die."

He was so much amused by the time he reached the end of his short account of his friend's life that he could hardly finish it for laughing.

Moy will be given a typical Chinese funeral. His casket will probably be a plain and inexpensive one. Chinamen do not believe in spending much money in this way. They will pay for all the carriages that are necessary to transport the numerous relatives to the cemetery and will spend money for what is wanted for the comfort of the spirits that are expected to hover about the grave, and do not mind buying fine garments to robe the body.

Until the day the body is interred it will rest in the undertaking establishment, and everything will be done by the Chinamen to prevent the assembling of a crowd of curious people at the grave. When they conclude to inter the body the undertaker will be notified and the carriages summoned at short notice. Then the solemn procession will start toward the cemetery. Imitation money will be scattered along the route of the procession to tempt the evil spirits and keep them so busy that they will forget the departed spirit.

Funeral of Chinaman

Moy Chun Laid to Rest With Appropriate Oriental Ritual

The funeral of Moy Chun, the laundryman who died April 10, occurred yesterday afternoon. The interment was made in Congressional cemetery. The remains had been embalmed and retained at Lee's undertaking establishment until his estate could be levied on to pay in cash the funeral expenses.

There were no ceremonies before the departure of the cortege for the cemetery. The body was clothed in silk raiment and enclosed in a casket of conventional pattern.

On the seat of the first carriage following the hearse sat a Chinese youth, who from time to time threw out small slips of manila paper, folded and having several perforations in irregular order. This paper represented money, which it was believed would delay and propitiate the evil spirits who followed the dead until the body was safe in a final resting place.

Awaiting the funeral party at the cemetery was a large crowd of curious people, mostly women.

The funeral party consisted of about seven Chinamen, who gathered at the edge of the grave as the casket was lowered into it. Two of these had brought baskets containing edibles, to be deposited in the grave for the pacification of attendant spirits. As the first clod of earth fell upon the coffin a bunch of joss sticks were stuck in the earth at the head of the grave and ignited. As their perfumed smoke floated about a Chinaman prepared a pot of tea, which, together with a bowl of rice, a broiled chicken and other components of an appetizing meal, were placed in the grave for the departing spirit to regale himself and new acquaintances in the next world. A diversion was created for the crowd when a cloud of smoke rose from the ground a short distance from the grave. The occasion of this was the burning of the dead man's personal effects. These included his clothing and all his private papers.

When the grave was refilled the funeral party entered their carriages without further ceremony were driven to their homes.

Lee Fun Wing Laid to Rest With Appropriate Honors

All that was mortal of Lee Fun Wing was put in a grave in Congressional cemetery yesterday, there to remain until the body can be resurrected and taken to China. Wing was only about 35 years old, and his death was due to consumption. He had recently lived at 330 Pennsylvania avenue, where he died. At the grave the Chinese burial services were participated in by relatives of the deceased, and there was the usual fire made of the dead man's effects, and Chinese punk, white wine and eatables were placed on the grave to tempt the evil spirits.

Lee Fun Wing was popular in the Chinese colony, and he had a much larger funeral than most Chinamen have had in this city. While Undertaker J. Wm. Lee was the one who furnished the casket and arranged for the carriages, the celestials made all their own arrangements and notified the undertaker of the time of the funeral only a short time before they were ready to start.

Moy Wing, the Chinaman who shuffled off this mortal coil a few days ago as the result of too much opium, was buried yesterday afternoon in Congressional Cemetery beside three other of his countrymen who have died in Washington. Moy was not buried with the pomp and splendor that usually characterizes the funerals of the Mongolians. The ceremonies at the grave were about the same as those generally employed, but the procession to the cemetery, the beating of tom-toms, the burning of incense enroute, and the scattering of small bits of paper, so that the deceased might find his way back, were omitted.

Several of his brethren, including his two brothers, who are in the laundry business, and Philip, the fat Chinaman who presides over the Chinese restaurant on Pennsylvania avenue, gathered at Lee's undertaking establishment, where the body was removed from the deadroom of the Emergency Hospital, about 3 o'clock. The body was borne to a hearse in the street and about fifteen Chinamen were bundled into three carriages and the procession moved directly to the Congressional Cemetery. No time was lost en route, and when the procession reached the part of the city adjacent to the cemetery it was evident that the children and curious persons of the neighborhood had heard of its approach, for hundreds of them were waiting on the sidewalks and started on a run after the procession and followed it to the cemetery. A great many were admitted to the cemetery, but the very small children had to content themselves with standing at the gate and peeping in.

Then five chop-sticks were laid in a row at the foot of the grave and between each chop-stick was placed a little dish that resembled a butter dish. Then two little teapots filled with oil were produced and the little dishes filled with oil.

Columbus Wickerman Was Despondent

Because of Wife's Death

Sitting in the back second-story room of his home, 510 K street southwest, last evening, Columbus Wickerman, 75 years of age, committed suicide by inhaling illuminating gas. Coroner Nevitt was notified and gave a certificate of suicide.

Mr. Wickerman ate supper with the other occupants of the house about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Shortly after he went to his room, where, it is stated, he was accustomed to spend the evening reading. Several hours later the odor of gas was detected coming from the second floor and an investigation was made. The inmates of the place opened the door of Mr. Wickerman's room and found him dead. The window was closed and gas steadily flowing from an open jet.

The deceased was born in Baltimore and came to Washington more than fifty years ago. He was a baker by trade. Three years ago his wife died, since which time, it is stated, he had been despondent.

The Rev. James Arthur Winn, 61, chairman of the Board of Deacons of the First Congregational Church, died at Garfield Hospital yesterday after a long illness.

The funeral will be held at the church at 2 p.m. tomorrow, with the Rev. Howard Stone Anderson, pastor of the First Congregational Church officiating, assisted by the deceased clergyman's brother, the Rev. Dr. John B. Winn, pastor of the Mount Vernon Methodist Church of Danville, Va. Private burial will take place at the Congressional Cemetery.

The Rev. Mr. Winn, who was born in Lunenburg County, Va., was active in church work until his illness. He was treasurer of the Congregational Home and teacher of the two largest Sunday school classes in his church, the women's Bible group and the Calvin Coolidge Memorial Bible Class. He was active in the ministry for many years.

Joined Conference in 1900

The son of William H. Winn and Mary Estes Winn of Virginia, he was educated at Randolph-Macon Academy, Bedford Va., and at Randolph-Macon College, Ashland, Va, joining the Virginia Methodist Conference in 1900.

His first charge as a Methodist minister was at Wachapreague in Accomac County, Eastern Shore of Virginia.

During his ministry he was outstanding for his evangelistic work and was instrumental in bringing many young men into the ministry, several of whom are prominent members of the Virginia Methodist Church.

In 1933, M. Winn retired from the Methodist ministry and came to live in Washington with his family at 3536 Thirteenth street N.W.

32d Degree Mason

Shortly after that he joined the Congregational Church, in which he later was ordained as a clergyman. In this capacity for several seasons he occupied the pulpit of the First Congregational Church during the summer months, and preached at other Congregational churches in Washington and Maryland.

Mr. Winn was a 32d degree mason and a former member of the Danville Kiwanis Club.

Columbia Historical Society, Volume 4

This gentleman was a native of Massachusetts, but was a citizen of Washington and a resident of the Navy Yard section from 1815 up to the date of his death. He entered the United States Navy in 1799, was appointed pursuer in 1815, and was assigned to duty in connection with the Washington Navy Yard and the Marine Barracks, in which position he served continuously until he died. He was a man of considerable scholarship, and possessed elegant taste and many accomplishments; these, however did not prevent him from taking an active interest in the public affairs of his day. Among other things that engaged his business attention was the construction of the bridge across the Anacostia River at the foot of Eleventh Street east, some years after the destruction of the bridge above during the invasion of Washington by the British in 1814.

Mr. Winn was one of the incorporators of the company that owned the new bridge. He was quite wealthy, and his house—still standing on the northwest corner of Tenth and I Streets southeast, and in old days one of the finest establishments in Washington—was the home of the most elegant and refined hospitality. Many of the old residents of the Navy Yard section will remember an honored servant of Mr. Winn's—Uncle Grandison as he was usually called—who lived to be nearly a hundred years old, and who in courtliness and kindliness and genuine worth was deserving of his name; he was, within the limitation of his opportunities, an exemplar of Richardson's hero, Sir Charles Grandison, the model of a true gentleman.

Will of Timothy Winn, of Washington Co., D.C. (dtd. Oct. 20, 1834, probated Feb. 23, 1836; Book 4, pp. 309-311; O.S. 1850; Box 13)

Exrs. to pay debts, and immediately sell my carriage and three horses; take standing credit at Bank of the Metropolis and Patriotic Bank of Washington, or any other banks; sell stock in Franklin Fire Insurance of Washington City, on which $1,000 has been paid.

Should my wife Rebecca continue in her present unfortunate state of mind, Exrs. to provide her every necessary and possible convenience of comfort; remainder of residue divided equally between my son William Timothy and daughter Mary Louisa.

Dwelling house and servants, with outhouses and gardens, all household and kitchen furniture, to remain in their present situation during life of wife as a place of residence for her and my son and daughter; should wife fortunately recover from her present mental indisposition, then house, gardens, furniture, servants remain for her use during her life.

To son William Timothy all wearing apparel, double cased gold watch, silver spurs; at death of wife, to son all estate in Kent Co., Md., known as "Winn's Resurvey of Howell's Point," the portrait of my father and my large family Bible; the Bible and spurs were bequeathed to me by my grandfather, Timothy Winn, of Middlesex Co., Mass.; servant man Charles Grandison.

To daughter Mary Louisa, $5,000 of stock in Corporation of Washington, and $5,000 in capital stock in Patriotic Bank of Washington; two old scripture paintings and my piano forte; servant woman Eliza Savoy.

To granddaughter Rebecca Ellis, $2,000 in capital stock in Washington Navy Yard Bridge Company; $2,000 of capital stock in the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company and any stock in the Franklin Fire Insurance Company of Washington City.

Servant man John Douglass shall not be free, nor sold without his own free will and consent; to be held in common by my son and daughter; should both with to own him Exrs. John Coyle and William Speiden shall determine by lot to which he shall belong; servants Betsy or Eliza Diggs and Juliette Tayloe, with her child, may either be sold or held in common by son and daughter.

To judge Powhatan Ellis, the portrait of my late daughter Mrs. Eliza R. Ellis; he has in his possession two boys Alfred and Edward, sons of my servant woman Lizy Savoy, for whom he holds no bill of sale, should he not return them voluntarily, they are never to be asked or demanded of him. If returned, Alfred to son and Edward to daughter.

To my sister Mrs. Mary Reed of Middlesex Co., Mass., the miniature likeness of my late brother Jonathan Bowers Winn.

To my brother William Winn, of Boston, the Declaration of Independence and Washington's Farewell Address, both set in gilt frames.

Miss Mary Winter Dies; Body Is Found In Room
Member of Old Capital Family Had Been Ill Some Time --
Father Was Builder
Miss Mary Winter, 74 years old, who lived alone in an apartment at 1440 Meridian place, was found dead in her room last night.  She had been ill for some time.

Finding bottles of milk at her door that had been delivered early yesterday prompted the investigation that resulted in police discovering the body.  Dr. Merton E. Twogood, who had attended her, gave the death certificate.

Miss Winter was a daughter of the late William H. Winter, local contractor, who had charge of the construction of a portion of the Capitol.  The Winter home was at the foot of New Jersey avenue southeast.  The contractor died many years ago and his wife several years later.  A son, Sergt. Joseph D. Winter, United States Marine Corps, died about eight years ago.

In the death of William H. Winter a large circle of friends mourn the loss of an esteemed associate, and this community that of a useful and an enterprising citizen.  The deceased was endowed with a vigorous and practical mind, animated and sustained by an indomitable will and untiring perseverance.  Such was the confidence felt in his judgment and taste in the line of his business that his advice was eagerly sought by those of the highest attainments and culture engaged in similar pursuits.  In this respect his name will ever be honorably associated with the two principal buildings which embellish the metropolis--the Patent Office and the Capitol.  He was scrupulously honest and punctual in all his engagements, not only in the days of abundant prosperity, but equally in the early years of adverse fortune.  Kind in his feelings, no causeless censorious words fell from his lips in reproach of his fellow-men; but his generous nature always prompted him to forgive rather than condemn.  Generous in his charities and acts of kindness, they proceeded only from an innate sense of duty to his fellow-men, which he ever cherished and cultivated as one of the highest virtues of humanity.  In the gratification of his private friendships there was no labor too arduous, no sacrifice too great, which he was not ready to encounter.  Around his children the warmest affections of his heart clustered and the deep love with which they reciprocated the father's devotion was painfully attested by the agonized grief with which they took their last farewell of his mortal remains.  Let not this be considered the tribute of too partial friendship; the vast concourse of citizens of every class to attendance upon his funeral, manifesting the most decorous and heartfelt grief, bears testimony to the esteem felt for him a citizen and their love for him as a friend.  --National Intelligencer.
Funeral of William H. Winter

Yesterday, the funeral of the late W.H. Winter took place from his family residence near Blagden's wharf, and the procession was one of the largest ever seen in Washington at the burial of any private citizen, showing how extensive was Mr. Winter's acquaintance with the citizens of Washington, and how great was their respect for him. The funeral service of the Baptist church was performed by Rev. G.W. Sampson, who, in a brief but impressive address, related the circumstances attending his last interviews with the deceased.

The pall-bearers were--Messrs. Thos. U. Walters, J.C. Harkness, Thomas Berry, Wm. M. Ellis, P.J. Brooks, Randolph Coyle, Walter Lenox, Esq., and Major H. Tyler.

The coffin was a magnificent one, covered with black silk velvet, handsomely trimmed with silver lace and beautifully decorated with flowers. It was placed in a hearse drawn by four white horses, and the immense procession began to form. When the head of the procession had turned into Pennsylvania avenue, the line was not complete but was still forming at the house.

A very large number of the Sons of Malta, of which order the deceased was a member, was present, wearing their badge, a small Maltese cross, on the left breast.

The Stone Cutters' Associations were out in a body and marched to the cemetery; and besides these there were hundreds of others, pedestrians in the line. The corpse was conveyed to the Congressional Cemetery, and deposited in the vault to await the future orders of the family.

Wirt. At Baltimore, on Thursday, Dec. 30th, in the 16th year of her age, Agnes Cabell Wirt, youngest daughter of William Wirt, Esq. of that place.

Her morning of life had dawned in peace and love, embossed among relations and friends, whose warmest affections were entwined around this young rosebud of loveliness. Her gentle heart had never been wounded by unrequited tenderness, and, as the bright visions of happiness with which her heaven-inspired fancy colored the future, were too pure, too glowing to be realized in this blighting world, Heaven translated her to a blissful realization of them before she had felt the withering reverse.

With a quickness of intellectual perception which seemed intuition—an activity and grasp of mind which, though young in years, gave her the mastery of every subject that came within the range of her inquisitive research—with a wonderful justness of discrimination, and an eloquent warmth of imagination, that shed its bright tincturing over every circumstances of life—she united those deep and gushing fountains of feeling, which overflowed in benevolence to every human being, and created a fairy world of sensibility wherever she moved. Non ever felt the influence of that voice, attuned to harmony by Heaven's celestial sympathies, and listened to the enthusiasm of genius, that poured naturally and with a child's winning playfulness from her smiling lips, or breathed the enchanted atmosphere which her irresistible tenderness and loveliness created, as a halo of glory around her, without feeling that she was a spirit too shining bright, too passing lovely, to be long tramelled by these earthly fetters.

And young as beautiful! and soft as young!
And gay as soft! and innocent as gay!
And happy (if aught happy here) as good!
Song, beauty, youth, love, virtue, joy—this group
Of bright ideas, flowers of Paradise,
As yet unforfeited, in one blaze we bind,
Kneel and present it to the skies, as all
We guess of Heaven—and these were all her owned
Like blossom'd trees o'erturned by vernal storm,
Lovely in death the beauteous ruin lay;
And if in death still lovely, lovelier there,
Far lovelier."

Her life was a beautiful model of every moral excellence in active exercise. Soon had her young heart learned to adore and burn with rapt seraphs; and that which constituted her greatest earthly fascination, was the perpetual reaching up of her soul to Heaven. She had learned that it was saved to love God, and to serve him on earth—and when asked a few hours before her death if she had any thing to regret on earth? she answered "Nothing; my only wish is to live, if it be my Father's will, to adore and serve Him on earth—but," she added, (and every heart thrilled to the holy sweetness of her tones) "If it be not sinful, if it be not impatience of suffering, I want to go to Jesus, to love him and praise him to all eternity in Heaven."

Farewell, sweet searph! Forgive this feeble effort of one, whose heart will long mourn thy early loss. Oh! may thy bereaved friends derive this moral from thy life and holy death, that "it is sweet to die the death of the righteous."

Obituary

A great man has been taken from amongst us -- the scholar, the orator, the profound jurist, the able statesman, and honest man. A man whom genius and virtue, unaided by adventitious circumstances, combined to raise to the proudest eminence. A giant in intellect, and upright as he was able -- never dazzled by power, or deluded by ambition -- great without pretension, good without pretence, and benevolent without ostentation -- a Christian without bigotry, a man without reproach. He stood forth a glorious example of the combination of genius, with the highest moral and social excellence -- a bright model of public purity and private worth. Such was William Wirt.

To know him, as the public knew him, by his writings and his speeches, was to admire and honor him -- to know him personally, was to esteem -- to know him at home, in his domestic circle, was to love him.

The nation has lost a man, whose place will not soon be filled -- his friends have sustained a loss, which can never be repaired. Adieu, great, noble, virtuous spirit. The heart which now bleeds for thy loss, and which has often thrilled at thy eloquence and warmed at thy goodness, may grow cold with age, but never shall be effaced from it the impression of thy kindness, nor love and admiration for the loveliness and beauty of thy public and private character. The head which now dictates this feeble tribute to thy memory, may be bleached by the suns of many summers, but never can we hope to know again thy like. Adieu -- and may the pure spirit which hath been so severely bruised, but never bowed by afflictions here, have found a fit resting place, with kindred spirits, in a better world.

Obituary

Died, about meridian, yesterday, in this city, William Wirt, Esq. aged about 62 years.

In him his family have lost all that can be lost, in one among the most tender, devoted, and enlightened of husbands and fathers.

Of all who witnessed the strong and heart-endeared ties which this event has sundered, there lives not one but must sympathize, from his inmost soul, with the amiable and exemplary wife who at once imparted and partook the purest and highest enjoyments of conjugal union, and who is now to see a premature grave open to receive the mortal remains of him who was the source and the object of the hallowed affections by which that union was cemented and embellished -- with children, to whom the hand is now cold and motionless, which but yesterday led them, with paternal solicitude and unerring aim, through the paths of human science, in all the intricacies of which the exercises of studious youth, and the sustained application of mature years, had instructed him, and which his genius had illustrated; to those children, the eloquent tongue, though not yet mute to grateful memory, no longer speaks, in living accents, precepts of wisdom, morality, and piety, so lately enforced by the example, and adorned by the life and manners of a Christian, a scholar, and a gentleman.

His country, indeed, has lost a citizen, whose talents and virtues, always adequate to the higher tasks of public service, were always devoted, with unflinching patriotism, to his country's good: but to that country he has left an inheritance in the extended fame which will perpetuate his name with the enduring monuments of the age and land in which he lived.

His professional brethren must largely participate all the causes of profound regret, both general and particular, that can affect either communities or individuals. Lamenting him as a brother, whom in life they loved with brotherly affection, and admired as the ornament of their profession; they have lost no time in evincing their alacrity to manifest their respect to his memory; and will, doubtless, follow out the first promptings of a spontaneous and all-pervading sentiment, and give unequivocal and lasting tokens of the sincerity and depth of their affection, their admiration, and their regret.
The Court have heard the announcement of the death of William Wirt, a member of this Bar, with deep regret. His distinguished career at the Bar, and in the Executive Department of the Government, has made him known to the whole nation, while his literary labors have proved beneficial to the present generation, and will be read with profit and delight by succeeding generations as long as purity of morals are estimated or classic beauty of style shall be a subject of admiration.

The Court will, in respect for the memory of Mr. Wirt, direct an adjournment, and will further order this evidence of their high estimation of his services and capacity to be spread upon the minutes of the Court.

At a meeting of the Judges of Baltimore Court and City Courts, and of the members of the Bar of both Courts, held in the County Court Room, on Wednesday, the 19th instant, on motion of Col. U.S., Heath, the Hon. Stevenson Archer was called to the Chair, and Reverdy Johnson, Esq. was appointed Secretary.

On motion of John Glenn, Esq. the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That it is with the most poignant grief that Bench and Bar of Baltimore County and City Court have received the tidings of the death of William Wirt.

That, long endeared to him by professional as well as personalities, they feel that in his demise they have lost a brother whose character and fame have dignified and illustrated the profession, and whose private worth commanded the liveliest affections of the community in which he lived:

That, richly gifted with the science of Jurisprudence his attainments have contributed in an eminent degree to the service of his country:

That, endowed with the most powerful eloquence, it has long and successfully been devoted to the support of right:

That, stored with the various accomplishments of a profound and elegant scholar, they have been rendered subservient to the instruction and expansion of the public mind:

That, imbued with the purest principles of virtue, or unbounded benevolence, charity and affection, bland and courteous in his manners, and fraught with the loftiest sentiments of honour -- that honour which felt a stain like a wound, he gave an example in private life that improved and exalted the manners of the society around him -- and

That, impressed with a devout zeal of a Christian, whose faith rested on the conclusions of a mind earnest and dispassionate in its contemplations, and firm and unwavering in its practice of the divine precepts, he afforded an eminent example to all who sought to attain the great ends of existence.

Resolved, That as a testimony of the sorrow of this meeting, they will wear the usual badges of mourning for the remainder of the Term.

Resolved, That John P. Kennedy, Esq. be appointed to deliver a public address commemorative of the character and virtues of the deceased, at some early day after the commencement of the next Term,

Resolved, That a Committee of three be appointed, on the part of the Bench and Bar, to procure a suitable tablet dedicated to the memory of the deceased, to be set up on the room of the County Court, and that the said Committee be likewise directed to communicate to the family of the deceased the condolence of this meeting in the unhappy bereavement they have sustained.

The Chair appointed Messrs. Glenn, Leah, and Johnson, the Committee to carry into effect the object of the last resolution.

Stevenson Archer, Chairman
Reverdy Johnson, Secretary

The following opinion of the character and talents of the late William Wirt--a biography of whom is about to appear, according to public report, from the pen of the Hon. J.P. Kennedy--is expressed in a letter to the editors of the New York Journal of Commerce:

Interments in the Historic Congressional Cemetery

Last Updated: 2/13/2015
Report says that John P. Kennedy, Esq., who wields a practiced pen, is about to publish the life of William Wirt, a noble subject for a portrait. Having had frequent opportunities of witnessing the public efforts of that distinguished man, and having also had some private acquaintance with him, I can speak of him with truth as one of the brightest jewels of our country. Possessing a commanding personal presence, a voice of singular compass and richness, and a highly cultivated mind, with great facility of giving utterance to its conceptions, he reached and maintained the highest rank in his profession. If from his published works the impression has been received that in the composition of his mind the imagination held the predominance, it is a mistaken one. On those works its energies seem to have been spent, while in his arguments at the bar the strength of his reasoning powers appeared to great advantage. He was master of a skilful and searching analysis, and equally vigorous and astute in the department of synthesis. His argument in the case of the impeachment of Judge Peck, was one of masterly skill and comprehensiveness; and he gained the defense against one of the strongest committees of impeachment ever commissioned by a legislative body. He was a favorite of Marshall, that great expounder of pure law, in whom the faculty of the imagination was so profoundly quiescent.

The Grave of William Wirt

The very interesting biography of William Wirt, by John P. Kennedy, has recalled to my memory a lamentable fact connected with his death, which I have long regretted as a melancholy evidence of the oblivion which usually follows the memory of the most illustrious when they sink into the tomb, and pass off forever from the stage of life.

At the death of this distinguished orator and jurist some of his legal friends proposed to erect a monument over his body, in the Congressional burying-ground in this city, provided his bereaved and afflicted widow would consent to allow it to remain there. This consent was obtained, and on the 20th of February, 1834, the remains of the lamented Wirt were laid in the receiving vault of the cemetery, preparatory to final deposit in the grave over which the contemplated monument was to be erected, as a testimonial of the high appreciation of his virtues and his genius entertained by the members of the bar in this city and throughout the United States. The rule adopted by the Vestry of Christ's Church, who have the management of this cemetery, limits, I believe, the retention of bodies in the receiving vault to one month. At the instance and solicitation of one of the friends of the deceased, to whom had been assigned the duty of obtaining funds from the members of the profession to erect the proposed monument, the time fixed by the rule for the removal of the body was, from time to time, extended; and it was not until the 20th day of January, 1835, that it was finally taken from the vault and deposited in the humble grave where it now reposes, between those of Gen. Jacob Brown and Judge Philip Barbour. No stone marks the spot where his remains are now mouldering into and blending with their kindred elements. The admirer of eloquence and genius, when he asks where is the grave of him on whose lips, while living, I have hung with intense delight--whose polished intellect ornamented everything it touched, and whose glowing imagination irradiated the darkest intricacies of jurisprudence, will be answered, "Go to the sexton; he alone can point it out, or direct you to it." It is "Where heaves the turf in many a mouldering heap," and is as undistinguishable as that of the most obscure and unknown, whose body is mouldering into dust in this last resting place of the dead. The eye glances over the marble tombs and splendid monuments erected by Congress, or by affection, to the memory of those who had once been great, useful, or beloved. A broken shaft covers the body of Gen. Brown, erected by Congress; and every member of either House, whether he died here or a thousand miles off, has a tomb (to be sure very tasteless) with his name, age, etc. engraved upon it, erected to his memory. Why has the grave of Wirt, who has shed such lustre on the American bar and on the office of Attorney General of the United States, been so long and so strangely neglected? And what has become of the funds once collected for a monument to his memory among the members of the bar of which he was so brilliant an ornament? The officers of the navy have erected a fine monument in honor of the brave and gallant young men who fell off Tripoli, and the officers of the medical staff one to the memory of Dr. Lovell, formerly Surgeon General of the army, alike honorable to the living and the dead. If the members of the legal profession, although they promised to do so, as well as to contribute funds for the erection of a monument to Chief Justice Marshall, in the same cemetery, still neglect this duty, it is to be hoped that Congress will do something to honor the memory of both those great and illustrious men, who have given so high a character to the American bar and to American jurisprudence.

The Suicidal Mania

Wm. W. Wirt, A Treasury Clerk, Supposed to Have Drowned Himself

A well-dressed man, about 45 years of age, started for Alexandria on the ferry boat City of Washington last evening at 6:30 o'clock. He remained in the bar-room for awhile, and then ascended to the upper deck, where he paced back and forth in a preoccupied manner. When the boat, was opposite Giesboro he stepped upon the railing and threw himself into the water. Every effort was made to save him but of no avail. His hat was recovered, and inside of the crown were the letters "W.W.W." No one on the boat was acquainted with the suicide. This morning Mr. Clay Douglas visited police headquarters and stated that the drowned man was supposed to be his brother-in-law, Mr. William W. Wirt, who for years resided at No. 432 H Street northwest, and was the son-in-law of the late William Douglas. Wirt was a man about 45 years old, of medium build, with gray whiskers, and he dressed well habitually. He has not lived with his wife and family for several years. For some months past he roomed at No. 457 G street, but left there about two weeks ago on a spree, and has not returned since. He was employed as a clerk in the Treasury, but had not been at his post for a similar period. His body has not yet been recovered. The hat which was recovered is a brown derby, and it has been identified as belonging to Mr. Wirt. Wirt was last seen on Sunday night, at the residence of his aunt, Mrs. Cook, No. 300 H street northwest.

The Evening Star, November 28, 1884
W.W. Wirt's Body Recovered
About 8:30 o'clock Wednesday afternoon the body of W.W. Wirt, who committed suicide about two weeks ago by drowning himself by jumping off a Washington and Alexandria ferry boat, was found floating in the river near the magazine by Richard Lawrence. It was towed to the Arsenal wharf and turned over to M. Joseph C. Lee, the undertaker. Yesterday Coroner Patterson viewed the body and gave a certificate in accordance with the facts.

He was German by birth, is said to have been in the corps over twenty years, and leaves several hundred dollars in cash, without any heirs that are known. We chanced to be present at the funeral, and were much impressed by the military ceremony and dignity with which the remains of this humble soldier were honored. The coffin was draped in the stars and stripes, the drums muffled, and his comrades in full uniform, under the command of Sergeant McDonald, the handsomest soldier we ever laid eyes on. Undertaker John M. Mitchell has had charge of caring for the body since Tuesday, when the unfortunate woman died, and owing to the purging of blood from the mouth no one has been permitted to look through the glass casing of the ice chest.

Her face has been entirely hidden from view by a bandage of white cotton, which covered her face and neck and which showed plainly the stains of the blood.

This morning the undertaker went to the health officer with the death certificate and procured the necessary permit for the interment of the body in Congressional cemetery this afternoon.

To Be Buried As Marie Wolff

The certificate of death given by Coroner Patterson gives the name of the deceased as Marie Wolff and her age as 31 years. Her occupation was given as that of a housekeeper and Germany as her birthplace. Narcotic poison--suicide--was mentioned as the cause of death. The certificate also gave the information that the deceased was married.

This afternoon the body was prepared for burial and placed in a handsome cloth-covered casket, on the lid of which was a solid silver plate bearing the inscription:

Marie Wolff,
Died September 22, 1891
Aged thirty-one years.
And at either end was a sheaf of wheat in silver.

The Funeral

The funeral services will be conducted by the pastor of the German Lutheran church on Capitol Hill, as Mrs. Kraemer, the suicide's mother, is of that faith, although her daughter was an Episcopalian. Four o'clock is the hour set for the ceremonies at the house, which will be private, only relatives and a few intimate friends of the family to be permitted to be present.

Maj. T.B. Kirby, Messrs. F.P. Ferris, John P. Miller, W.C. Willenbucker, Kraeter and Dr. J. Cooper, McGinn will serve as pallbearers.

Mrs. Alice Gilman of New York, a married sister of the deceased, reached here last night.

Mrs. Kraemer Expects Wolff

Paul Wolff has not been heard from since he was notified of Marie's death, although Mrs. Kramer still expects he will reach here in time for the funeral ceremonies. Among the stories told by one of the neighbors this morning was one to the effect that Marie was not the first woman who had taken her life because of her love for Paul Wolff. Mrs. Kramer stated, so the story goes, that when Paul Wolff came to this country he left a sweetheart behind him, who sought peace of mind in a similar manner.

Marie's Last Will

A sealed envelope was found in Wolff's collar box, indorsed: "Last will and testament of Marie Kramer."

Upon opening the envelope it was found to contain the following, written upon a half sheet of paper.

Washington, D.C., Sept. 21, 1891
I, Marie Kramer, leave everything in my possession to my mother, Christine Kramer. Paul Wolff is to pay all expense for funeral and house.

Marie Kraemer Wolff's Funeral

The Services Performed by a Methodist Minister--

A Large Attendance

The remains of Mrs. Marie Kraemer Wolff were laid in Congressional cemetery yesterday afternoon. The funeral services were held at the house a little after 5 o'clock, a delay of more than an hour having been occasioned by the failure of the minister to attend. The pastor of Concord Lutheran Church had been engaged to conduct the services. He was at the house during the day and though he showed some disinclination to conduct the services, he said that he would be back at 4 o'clock and officiate. He did not again appear. The pastor of Christ Episcopal Church refused to read the burial services, because, he said, the laws of his church would not permit it over the body of a suicide. The services were finally conducted by Rev. W.M. Osborne, a Methodist minister. A large number of ladies, matrons and their daughters, who had met Mrs. Wolff through introductions by her husband and had become her intimate friends, and gentlemen, who, as friends of her husband, had met her and learned to have a high regard for her, attended the services both at the house and at the cemetery. The casket was covered with flowers sent by her lady friends and by members of the press and their wives, who had been acquainted with her in life.

Man Drowned
We understand that a man named Wood was seen last Thursday to push off in a boat from the opposite shore into the Eastern Branch. The man had a bottle full of whiskey with him of which he drank so freely as to become intoxicated. While Wood was in the middle of the channel, he was seen to fall overboard and was drowned. A sad warning to drunks.

Death of a Man of Genius
Died, on Tuesday morning last, of dropsy in the chest, Mr. Joseph Wood, Miniature Painter in the 52d year of his age. His friends and acquaintances are invited to attend his funeral from his residence on Pennsylvania Avenue this morning at 10 o'clock.

Obituary Sketch
Genius is the inspiration of the Deity; "but (says Dr. Johnson) the brightness of the flame wastes its own fuel." Prudence is its guardian angel on earth, and should every accompany it in its intercourse with man. Genius passes from he earth like the transient gleam of a meteor, and ascends to that Fountain of Light from which it emanated.

Let the pencil of truth portray a man of Genius as he was; let it delineate
"Those lights and shades whose well accorded strife
"Gave all the strength and colour of his life."

Mr. Joseph Wood, the subject of this obituary sketch, was born near Clarkstown, Rockland county, New York in the year 1778, and came to this Metropolis in 1816. For a considerable time previous to his settlement in this place, his talents as a Miniature Painter had acquired for him merited celebrity in the City of New York. His fame found its way into every section of our Union. His company was courted by the first men of the Nation; but instability is a prominent trait in the human character; and those pleasing visions vanished and left a dreary waste in its stead -- and a mighty mind surrounded by its own desolation. The productions of his pencil were of a superior order, and the qualities of his mind were in unison with his extraordinary skill as an artist. How happy would it have been could he have preserved the even tenor of that felicitous life which he enjoyed 'mid the romantic scenes of his native mountains; when his youthful imagination indulged in every innocent reverence, when not a flower bloomed, when not a zephyr exhaled the meadows' fragrance; "when not a cloud imbibed the setting son's effulgence," but served to excite and to animate his fancy. But, alas! the indiscretions of a maturer age; brought on by improper associations, embittered his latter days. Where were those pretended friends -- his companions of conviviality, who soothed his follies, palliated his errors, and encouraged him to excess? They vanished and left their half-murdered victim to the kindness of other friends; and, for aught they cared, to expire neglected and forgotten? Those associations in his cooler moments he despised; but, alas! how imperceptibly is man led from one folly to another! Company, for which his superior mind at times entertained the greatest contempt, by degrees, became pleasing and habits, at which he once shuddered, became familiar by convivial associations. Latterly he became convinced of the fickleness of what too many think "pleasure;" and he experienced the consequent bitterness of regret.

Interments in the Historic Congressional Cemetery  Last Updated: 2/13/2015
There was a redeeming spirit in Mr. Wood, and, for some time previous to his death, he expressed to the writer of this hasty sketch, the utmost abhorrence of former associates who had been instrumental in his injury; he had determined, in future, to renounce all connection with them and participation in their thoughtless course -- and he hoped all of similar habits would follow his example. Happy resolution! but, alas! made too late. The fatal seeds had been sown, and our Country has sustained a loss of one of her brightest ornaments, and Genius weeps over another immolated son!

Mr. W. always exculpated. Genius from the common, but mistaken reproach, of waywardness; and was of opinion, that bad habits, gradually imbibed, caused the unjust imputation.

Conscious of his powers in the line of his profession, he never depreciated the words of others to subserve his own purposes, but seemed ever pleased to make known the excellencies of all artists' performances."

Ingenuous, high-minded, and honorable, but for 'friends,' what a harvest of wealth might no Joseph Wood have reaped! but shall they be termed friends who courted his company in prosperity and deserted him in the dark hour of adversity? They were the vilest enemies, who administered the poisoned chalice to his lips, and made him the premature victim of their own deleterious habits. Truth; not what some men term "good," has been written of the dead for the benefit of the living; but would they profit by it, let them resist the first approach of speedy death -- vice.

A short time previous to his death, being asked what he wished most to communicate, he replied: That he hoped his son "would never do aught contrary to his own judgment" -- an admonition of the greatest value to those who are liable to be led away by others, by adopting their vices.

Against the stream of Reason's light,
Fate hurried him along;
Forever aiming to be fit,
And yet forever wrong!
Thus a mad comet hastens on;
Coursing the sky it darts;
Approaches nearest to the sun,
And furthest then departs.

Mr. Wood possessed his reason to the last. He called his family to his bed side, blessed them, and calmly resigned his spirit to Him who gave it. He has left us, it is confidently believed, for a better state of existence; for the Father of the Universe it is certain pityes the infirmities of the repentant sons of misfortune - of the children of sensibility. This imperfect sketch is given by one who nightly watched, with his family, the flickerings of genius expiring in the socket. This candid obituary, coinciding as it does with sentiments which Mr. W. ever entertained and expressed, and exhibiting his fate, may serve as a beacon for the admonition of others; yet, it is not intended to sully, in the least degree, the purity of that spirit which has ascended to its God. A Printer.

First visit, Jan. 20-21, 1825
“I visited the painter Wood who was formerly a goldsmith and became a painter of his own accord. His main field is miniature painting, but he also does sketchy portraits in watercolor and those I like pretty well. I find them spirited and tasteful, and have even greater estimation of the artist because he became everything he is on h is own.”

Dictionary of American Biography

WOOD, JOSEPH (c. 1778 – c. 1832), miniaturist, portrait painter, was born in Clarkstown, Orange County, N. Y., the son of a respectable farmer who was also sheriff of the county. Wishing his son to follow his own calling, the father frowned upon his artistic tendencies. Finally, at the age of fifteen, Joseph ran away to New York, hoping to become a landscape painter and to find a position that would help him improve his drawing. In both objectives he was bitterly disappointed, and spent several friendless years variously working and playing the violin for a livelihood. One day he saw some miniatures in a silversmith’s window on Broadway and, persuading the proprietor to accept him as apprentice, was finally allowed to examine and copy one of the miniatures. For several years he worked as a silversmith, but about 1804, having made the acquaintance of another young artist, John Wesley Jarvis [q.v.], Wood went into partnership with him. The two young men started a flourishing business in eglomise silhouettes, sometimes taking in as much as a hundred dollars a day. William Dunlap [q.v.], who visited the two young men, describes them as artists who “indulged in the excitements, and experienced the perplexities of mysterious marriages; and it is probable that these perplexities kept both poor, and confined them to the society of young men, instead of that respectable communion with ladies, and the refined circles of the city, which Malbone enjoyed” (post, II, 214). These “mysteries and perplexities” are also cited as possible causes of the none-too-friendly dissolution of the Wood-Jarvis partnership about 1809. Through Jarvis, Wood met Edward Greene Malbone [q.b], one of the foremost American miniaturists of the day, and received instruction from him in the art of the miniature from the preparation of the ivory to the finishing of the picture. Malbone also rendered Wood considerable assistance and was his friend so long as he lived.

Wood maintained a studio in New York until 1812 or 1813, having set up for himself after the break with Jarvis, but moved to Philadelphia and exhibited regularly at the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts until 1817. By 1827 he was established in Washington. and it is possible that he painted also in Baltimore. He was a prolific worker, turning out innumerable portraits and miniatures as well as pencil sketches and silhouettes. Among his oils are a cabinet-size painting of Andrew Jackson and a portrait of Henry Clay.

A miniature of Jackson by Wood was engraved in 1824 by James B. Longacre, while his portrait of Clay was lithographed in 1825 by Albert Newsam. He also painted a miniature of John Greene Proud. A watercolor portrait of an unknown man is inscribed on the reverse, “presented to Edith McPherson by Mrs. Abby Wood, 1839.” Whether or not the Mrs. Wood thus mentioned was his widow is unknown. In his later years, whether through dissipation or other adversity, Wood slipped into a state of poverty, in which he died in Washington about 1832 at the age of fifty-four (Ibid., II, 230). Nathaniel Rogers, who became his pupil in 1811 and was his paid helper for several years, is said to have befriended him and his children in their adversity (Ibid., III, 17).

William M. Wood Killed

A Young Man From Washington Found Dead in a Freight Train

In the bottom of a gondola of a freight train, which arrived at Petersburg, Va., at a late hour Tuesday night from Norfolk, was found a white man, well dressed, and upon his face and head were ghastly wounds, and by his side was a heavy piece of oak railing, with which the man was probably beaten. The wounded man, who was in an unconscious condition was taken to the city jail, where he died early yesterday morning.

In his coat pocket was found a certificate which stated that Wm. M. Wood enlisted in the naval reserve of the United States September 15, 1888, and was honorably discharged November 15, 1889.

Among other papers found on his person was a certificate signed by John Cooper, inspector of hulls, and E.F. White, inspector of boilers for the city of Baltimore.

Belonged Here

A telegram was sent to Mr. John H. Cooper, inspector of hulls at Baltimore, adnd in reply this official stated that Wood belongs in Washington and advised the police authorities to communicate with William Clipper, Sun building, Washington, D.C. A telegram was immediately sent to that address.

A coroner's inquest was held in the afternoon and the verdict of the jury was that Wm. M. Wood came to his death on the 16th day of October, 1895, from wounds on the head inflicted by parties unknown.

Mr. Hess reached Petersburg last night from Washington and identified the body as that of Wm. M. Wood. Mr. Hess will leave for Washington with the remains today.

Arrested on Suspicion

Wm. Brennan and Henry Turner, two United States marines of the cruiser Minneapolis and Adolph Lyners, a German emigrant, were arrested last night on the charge of being implicated in Wood's murder. They all acknowledge that they were on the freight train upon which the body of Wood was found, stealing a ride from Norfolk to Petersburg, and that they were ordered off the train by the conductor. They say they got off, but boarded the train again as soon as it started and came only as far as Waverly, which is twenty two miles east of Petersburg, where they got off and spent the night in the woods and came to Petersburg on another train.

A Young Washingtonian

W.M. Wood is a young Washingtonian about twenty-five years of age. His mother resides here with her two daughters and is a clerk in the Treasury Department. Young Wood had been in the navy, but about eighteen months ago was licensed in Baltimore as first mate upon the Atlantic coast trading vessels. Six months ago he went to San Francisco to become first officer upon a Pacific mail steamer. His friends supposed he was still upon the Pacific and do not know how he came to be in Petersburg.

Colonel Wm. P. Wood Dead -- Veteran of Wars and Friend of Edwin M. Stanton

Unearthed Brockway -- Secured Plates of Noted 7.30 Bond Counterfeit
When Col. William P. Wood died yesterday at the Soldiers' Home there was removed from earth a man who had been a prominent figure in the national capital for nearly half a century. He was a veteran of the Mexican and civil wars, and one of the few remaining survivors of Walker's filibustering expedition to Nicaragua. He was also the first chief of the United States secret service when it became part of the Treasury Department.

The connection of Col. Wood with the civil war was unique, and his relations with President Lincoln and Secretary Stanton were absolutely confidential.

His life was actively sought more than a dozen times: one man crossed the ocean to assassinate him; the confederates were determined to capture and hang him, and dozens, perhaps scores of times he escaped from apparently inextricable dangers by his extraordinary nerve, adroitness and audacity, coupled with prodigious physical strength and activity.

Col. Wood's life was a continuous melodrama, bordering on the tragic. He was born in Alexandria, Va., March 11, 1820. His father was an engraver and die sinker, and Wood became one of the most expert model makers, die sinkers and mechanics in the country. When the Mexican war broke out he enlisted in the mounted rifles of Gen. Sam. H. Walker, the noted Texan ranger, whose command soon became the 3d Regular Cavalry, in which Wood was the dare-devil leader of the famous Company C. Serving out his time, he returned to Washington and married Harriet Smith of Cumberland, Md., by whom he reared a large family.

He had receded from the Catholic Church in which he was born and baptized, and was a conspicuous leader in the Know-nothing, which was a "no popery," party. He likewise was an active conductor on the underground railroad, and aided hundreds of runaway slaves to escape safely to Canada and New England.

Wood drilled men to take part in John Brown's raid at Harper's Ferry in 1859. Having in the Mexican war and elsewhere become proficient in military matters he revised and in part composed the book of tactics gotten out for the instruction of the abolitionists who were to join Brown in all parts of the country to wipe out slavery.

Wood would have had charge of the enterprise, but objected to crossing state lines under arms. Unable to convince Brown that the methods he wished to pursue would lead him to the halter if he failed, as he was sure to do, Wood and his men remained out of the Harper's Ferry raid and quietly disbanded after Brown's defeat and his death on the scaffold.

When Edwin M. Stanton became Secretary of War he appointed Wood to be superintendent of the military prisons of the District of Columbia, and concentrated the so-called "state" prisoners and all others in the Old Capitol prison, near the Capitol, to which was soon added, for females and citizens, the Carroll buildings, called the Carroll prison.

Into these structures Wood sent spies, blockade runners, carriers of contraband dispatches, foreign officers armed with passports who were caught serving the confederacy, leaders of the Knights of the Golden Circle, opponents of the draft, etc. and to him, too, came all the captured mail of the locality to be deciphered and, if important, turned over to the proper officers of the War Department.

While maintaining strict, almost tyrannical discipline, the prisoners liked and respected Wood, frequently adopting resolutions to give expression to their feelings toward him.

Probably Col. Wood's most daring feat was making repeated personal visits to every military prison in the south. Sometimes he effected an entrance as agent of the federal government; frequently he entered in the disguise of a confederate soldier and a few times he got in by permitting himself to be taken prisoner. In several instances he procured the statements of inmates as to prison conditions, written out by stenographers in the presence of the officials in charge, for the information of Lincoln and Stanton.

When charges of starvation and cruelty to Union captives in confederate prisons were most numerous and persistent and the supplies sent to the incarcerated Union soldiers from the north were intercepted and eaten by the hungry confederates, Wood disguised as a North Carolina volunteer, secured entrance to Salisbury.
Castle Thunder and other prisons and distributed nearly a quarter of a million dollars in confederate money, with which the boys were able to purchase enough food and clothing to ease and prolong, if not save, life.

Capturing Counterfeiters
Among his other numerous and hazardous duties, Wood was charged by the Treasury Department with capturing counterfeiters, defrauders of the revenue, bounty-jumpers and persons violating government contracts for supplies.

When Lincoln was assassinated Wood was in Cincinnati searching for counterfeiters. A telegram from Stanton brought him in haste to Washington, where he was first to learn positively that the assassin was John Wilkes Booth. He secured from Dr. Mudd, in Maryland the first and only statement that Booth ever made concerning his part in the matter and would have effected a capture if the fugitive had not been shot as he emerged from a burning barn by Boston Corbett.

Col. Wood also secured the confession of Mrs. Surratt and Payne. He always maintained that Mrs. Surratt was innocent of taking any part in the conspiracy, and the last interview he ever had with Stanton turned upon this point.

After the war closed Wood was made chief of the secret service division of the treasury, in which he was eminently successful.

Famous 7.30 Bond Case
At the time of his death a bill was pending before Congress to pay him $15,000 for capturing the plate and author of the noted and dangerous 7.30 counterfeit. This was known as the Brockway case. The forgery was the occasion of a great law suit against the government. The bogus bonds were indeed works of art. No question of the genuineness was raised until Jay Cooke & Co. forwarded $84,000 worth to the treasury for redemption. Colonel Wood personally handled the case. He went to New York and received from Brockway the plates. Brockway was not prosecuted at that time because of the information that he gave to the government. Broken down and nearing the grave, this old counterfeiter is serving a ten years' sentence at Trenton, N.J., having been sent from Hoboken.

Col. Wood died in poverty, whereas if the claim, which the treasury had reported was honest and due, had been paid, his last days would have been passed in peace and ease.

One of the last of Wood's remarkable performances was getting possession of the secret papers in the Credit Mobelier case, which enabled a New York paper to make a sensational exposure of that notorious scheme. The documents were in a safe in Philadelphia. From Judge Jere Black, Wood managed to learn precisely where they were and just which ones were necessary to make the exposure complete.

Employing the services of a professional safe picker and thief, Wood extracted the papers that he wanted from the safe, took them to New York to be copied and was back in Washington when the paper came out with the expose which shook the country from ocean to ocean and gave to Judge Black a shock which nearly paralysed him.

Bosom Friend of Stanton
Col. Wood was probably nearer to Edwin M. Stanton than any other man. Wood was the last man who ever saw Stanton alive, and their final interview was a stormy one.

The last few weeks of Col. Wood's life were spent in writing his memoirs, and so anxious was he to complete the first outline of them that he frequently worked until midnight or arose at 2 in the morning and proceeded with his work.

Only meager reports of the accident reached the parents of the girl. Miss Woodward had been out for a walk with a friend in the vicinity of the University of North Carolina, where she was a freshman student, when a rainstorm overtook them. They were about to cross a street in the driving rain when an automobile skidded and swerved into Miss Woodward. Miss Elizabeth McKie, who was walking with her, sustained slight injuries.

Miss Woodward was a graduate of the Washington public schools and of Central High School. She finished her course at Central last February and entered the University of North Carolina this fall. Mr. Woodward, her father, is well known in real estate business circles here.

Dr. W.C. Woodward, former health officer here and present health officer of Boston, Mass., was preparing to leave this city, where he had been delivering lectures at local universities on medical law, when word of the death of Miss Woodward, his niece, arrived. He postponed his return to Boston and will remain for the funeral.

Inquest of the Fatal Accident on the Belt Line Road
Coroner’s Jury Hears Testimony on the Affair Today—
How Mr. Woodward Died

There was a fatal accident at Virginia avenue and 10th street southwest Saturday afternoon about 3 o'clock, which was the direct result of the cold weather and condition of the street. Joseph Woodward, the victim of the accident, was a huckster, who lived at No. 140 N street southwest. He was walking behind the wagon, which was moving along the line of the Belt line car tracks. There was a car drawn by four horses approaching, and when the drivers of the car horses made an outcry the man on the wagon pulled his horses to the side and got out of the way. The car was only a short distance from the wagon at that time. Woodward, whose head and ears were covered to protect him from the cold, was unable to hear the warning and he evidently did not see the approaching car, for he remained on the track and did not heed the warning. The drivers, James Gates and J. Nally, made every effort to stop the horses, but were unable to do so until after Woodward had been knocked down and dragged some distance.

The police patrol wagon was called and the injured man was taken to the Emergency Hospital. All the way to the hospital the injured man talked of his wife and child. He realized that he could not recover, and was extremely anxious about those whom he would have to leave behind him. When the hospital was reached it was found that his left arm was broken and he had sustained severe internal injuries, in addition to several external bruises and cuts. His wife was sent for, and she arrived at the hospital early in the evening, remaining there until her husband died, yesterday morning.

An autopsy performed by Dr. Glazebrook yesterday, showed that the severe internal injuries had caused death.

Coroner Hammett made an investigation of the case and had the body sent to Wright’s undertaking establishment, No. 1337 10th street northwest, where an inquest was begun this afternoon.

Before the Coroner

Henry Garner, a young man, who was with the deceased at the time of the accident, was the first witness examined. He thought the drivers of the car could have saved Mr. Woodward’s life had they pulled the horses from the track. The witness complained that the car bell was not sounded, and said that Mr. Woodward was knocked down before the drivers made an outcry to warn him of danger.

After he was knocked down, said witness, and the car was stopped, one of the drivers told witness to take the injured man away, but he (witness) could not move him without assistance, and the railroad men finally assisted him.
“What did Mr. Woodward say to you after he was knocked down?” the coroner asked.

“He asked for his wife and child,” the witness replied.

Henry Spurling, a disinterested witness told the jury that he thought the drivers and conductor did all they could in the matter. The driver pulled up the horses as quickly as they could and then assisted in removing the injured man.

Deputy Coroner Glazebrook testified to the autopsy, and said any one of the three injuries sustained would have caused death. He thought it remarkable that the man should have lived so long. Death was the result of shock.

George W. Leonard testified that he was crossing Virginia avenue at the time of the accident. He heard one of the drivers call “Look out,” and the next thing he saw was the man under the horses. Woodward, he said, was facing the horses, and he knew of no reason why he should not have seen the horses. Witness thought that in attempting to get out of the way Mr. Woodward slipped and fell.

_Under the Car_

Dr. Edward Green, druggist, at Virginia avenue and 10th street, was called, but he said he did not witness the accident. He went out of his store and saw the man under the car.

James H. Gates, one of the drivers of the Belt line road, who had charge of the brakes when the accident happened, testified that he called to the man in charge of the wagon to get out of the way. The wagon driver pulled out of the way, and Woodward, who was walking behind the wagon, either jumped or stumbled under the horses. Witness applied the brakes and the car slid against him.

The injured man, he said, wanted to know what would become of his wife and children.

The horses did not touch the man. If Mr. Woodward had followed the wagon he would not have been injured.

The jury returned a verdict of accidental death and exonerated the railroad employees.

William Worrell Succumbs To Attack of Paralysis

Funeral services over the remains of William Worrell, one of he oldest residents of Southwest Washington, who died at the family home, 934 D street southwest, yesterday morning shortly before 1 o'clock, will be held in Ryland Methodist Episcopal Church Monday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock. Rev. C. Herbert Richardson,*

Interments in the Historic Congressional Cemetery
pastor of Ryland Church, will conduct the services. With the passing of Mr. Worrell, it is said, one of the "landmarks" of Southwest Washington is removed. For at least seventy years he had resided in the house in which he died at 934 D street southwest.

About fifty years ago Mr. Worrell connected himself with Ryland Church, and since that time had been actively identified with the affairs of that congregation. He served as a member of the board of stewards of the congregation for over forty years. His wife died many years ago, as did his daughter, who was the wife of Maj. O.L. Pruden, formerly assistant secretary of Presidents Grant, Garfield, Hayes and Arthur, and Maj. Pruden was for years the carrier of the messages of the Presidents from the White House to Congress.

For a long period before his death Mr. Worrell was employed at the bureau of engraving and printing. In later years his duties were considerably lightened in deference to his long service. He was attending to his duties about 10 o'clock the morning of December 27, when he was stricken with paralysis. An ambulance was summoned and the aged man was taken at once to his residence, where he received medical attention. From the first, it is stated, it was seen that he had a small chance to recover. He gradually grew weaker as the days passed, and the end came yesterday morning, as stated. One son, William Worrell, who is employed in the government service, survives him.

Nevada Congressman's Grave Marked
By Steve Tetreault
WASHINGTON--Nevada reclaimed a piece of its history on Tuesday when a headstone was installed at an unmarked grave of its first congressman.

About 100 people attended the ceremony for Henry Gaither Worthington, who served in the House of Representatives for only three months after Nevada was granted statehood in October 1864.

Worthington moved out of the state sometime after he was denied the Republican nomination for re-election. He went on to become a diplomat in South America, a customs official in South Carolina and a political aide in Washington.

In 1909, he was buried in a numbered grave in Congressional Cemetery near Capitol Hill, forgotten until David Henley, a Northern Nevada newspaper publisher, tracked him down two years ago.

Henley, who runs the Lahontan Valley News & Fallon Eagle Standard, and Sen. Richard Bryan, D-Nev., found Worthington's burial spot, and Bryan arranged for the headstone to be purchased and carved.

Among those who attended were present-day Nevada lawmakers Shelley Berkley and Jim Gibbons, and former members of Congress Barbara Vucanovich and James Santini.

"For nearly a century, Worthington was an obscure figure nationally, unknown to almost all of us in Nevada, and in an unmarked grave," Bryan said. "If one were to try to capture the essence of the adventurous 19th century experience, he would have epitomized it."

Born in Maryland, Worthington ventured to California during the Gold Rush where he became a state legislator.

A Union supporter, he moved to Lander County in 1863, established himself as a minefield lawyer in Austin, and kept politicking. When Nevada was declared a state, he was sent East, where he cast a vote in Congress for the 13th Amendment abolishing slavery.

A friend of Abraham Lincoln, he attended Ford's Theater the night Lincoln was shot and served as a pallbearer at his funeral.

After being denied a chance for re-election, Worthing persuaded President Andrew Johnson to name him U.S. minister to Uruguay, becoming Nevada's first ambassador overseas. Present-day Uruguayan charge d'affaires Dr. Carols Mora was present at the headstone ceremony.

Charged With Murder
James Lancton to be Tried For Serious Crime
Death of Mrs. Wren, Alleged Victim of Assault-- Autopsy to be Performed

The charge of assault recently preferred against James Lancton was changed to murder this afternoon. This was done when the police learned from Columbian University Hospital that his alleged victim, Mrs. Bettie Ann Wren, had passed away. She died about 2 o'clock this afternoon. When arrested Lancton was very much under the influence of liquor, and his condition was so serious that he was taken to the Emergency Hospital for treatment. He remained in the hospital just one week before he was able to be taken to the Police Court. This was only two days ago. A charge of simple assault was preferred against him, and he was committed to jail without bail to await the result of the woman's injuries.

The assault is charged to have occurred the 12th of this month, at the home of Mrs. Wren, No. 634 E street southwest. It was a week later when the police learned that the woman had been badly injured and was likely to die. Then she was removed to the hospital and Lancton was arrested by the officers of the sixth precinct.

Wanted Her to Marry Him
Mrs. Wren was employed by an F street pension attorney, with whom Lancton had business. It was during his visits to the attorney's office that he met Miss Wren.

Then he called at her house to see her and, it is charged, he wanted her to marry him. Because she refused to accept him it is alleged he called at her house and assaulted her. She was in a critical condition when the police removed her to the hospital. Symptoms of paralysis soon developed and later the patient's mind was affected.

The police received from the hospital, from time to time, an account of her condition, and this afternoon learned of her death.

While at the hospital the man stated that he was innocent of the charge. He admitted that he was very much in love with the woman, and claimed they were to be married in May.

Coroner Carr was notified of the death of Mrs. Wren this afternoon. He will probably hold an inquest tomorrow. The prisoner is about fifty-four years old, while Mrs. Wren was nineteen years younger.

Lancton Held Responsible for Mrs. Wren's Death
Verdict of the Coroner's Jury
Evidence That Defendant Had Threatened Her With Death
Disclosures by Autopsy

James Lancton, who has been in custody several days on a charge of having inflicted fatal injuries on Mrs. Bettie Lee Wren, was held for the action of the grand jury today. He was present at the inquest held at the sixth precinct station this morning, having been brought up from jail. Lieut. Hollinberger of the fourth precinct and two of his officers who had made the investigation were also present. Several witnesses were examined, none of whom with possibly one exception, had witnessed the alleged assault, charged to have occurred the 12th of the month, at the home of the deceased, No. 634 E street southwest.

The prisoner was represented by Warder Voorhees and W.M. Offley. After the verdict was rendered the prisoner was returned to jail and the body of the deceased was removed from the morgue to Lee's undertaking establishment. The funeral will probably take place tomorrow.

Physician's Testimony

Dr. G.G. Morris, 815 14th street northwest, testified that he was called to see Mrs. Wren Saturday morning following the day she was injured. He found her in a serious condition showing evidences of brain trouble. There was also a man in the room, who was very much under the influence of liquor. Witness was told that Mrs. Wren's sister had complained that the intoxicated man had assaulted her. The man, whom the witness identified as Lancton, left the room and went into the kitchen. Mrs. Wren told him, he said, that the man had assaulted her. When witness ordered the intoxicated man from the house the latter refused to go, saying he was the injured woman's husband. Witness helped him on with his overcoat and saw that he left the house. Witness then informed the police. He got most of his information from a colored woman named King. She told him the assault was committed Monday afternoon, the 12th of the month. When he was called he found a bruise on the woman's head and there was paralysis of the left arm.

Afflicted Sister a Witness

Miss Ellen Wren, an invalid sister of the deceased, appeared before the coroner's jury. She had to be carried on a chair and was deaf and dumb. She motioned with her hand to show how her sister had been beaten about the face and body, and then pointed to the defendant who occupied a chair in the room.

John R. Wheatley, 907 6th street northwest, testified that when he heard about Mrs. Wren's injury he called at her house and found her in bed. She told him she had been beaten and kicked by Lancton. Witness said he had heard Lancton threaten the woman's life on several occasions.

The night of February 20, said witness, Lancton came into the house and said 'I'll cut your throat.' and 'I'll kill you, you ____ ___.' Witness added that he also said I'll murder you and I'll poison you.

Witness said he had boarded at Mrs. Wren's house for seven years. Lancton also lived there, and, said witness, he was a very jealous man. On one occasion, the witness said Lancton ordered him out of the house saying he had married Mrs. Wren, and he wanted to live there alone with her. The prisoner, he said, became acquainted with Mrs. Wren at the office of Mr. B. Stevens, where she was employed. He changed his boarding house after the prisoner told him he was married. Witness mentioned the dates on which the alleged threats were made. On one occasion he threatened to kill both Mrs. Wren and witness, and said: If I kill both of you I'll get off, because they'll say I'm crazy.

Heard Lancton Make Threats

Ida King, colored, testified that she had lived in the Wren family nearly all her life and said she could understand the signs made by the invalid sister. Witness said she heard Lancton threaten to kill Mrs. Wren the day of the alleged assault. He also said in her hearing he would kill Mr. Wheatley. The prisoner said he would commit a double murder if he (Lancton) caught the widow talking to Wheatley. The invalid sister told witness by signs of the alleged assault. Lancton entered the room while the sister was telling her of the affair, and she pointed to him as the man who had committed the assault.

Emily King, an elderly colored woman, testified that Saturday night previous to the alleged assault she went to see Mrs. Wren and Lancton put her out of the house. She thought he was sober at that time. When she heard that Mrs. Wren was ill, Wednesday, she called at the house and found her in bed. The floors were locked and witness crawled through a window. When she got into the house she was told the sick women had been without food for two days and she made some tea for them. Thursday night a man from the office where Mrs. Wren worked called at the house and found that she was sick. He sent the doctor to see her. Lancton had boarded at the house about four months.

Friends for Many Years

Mrs. S.F. Yates, who had been a friend of the Wren family for many years, was called to tell something about the invalid sister. She said she could understand everything the invalid says by signs.

I have known Mrs. Wren for fully fifty years, she said.

Was Mrs. Wren that old? the coroner asked.

Yes sir, she answered.
Mrs. Wren, she said, came of a good family and had lived here all her life.

Mrs. Hetty Hillings testified that she had been an intimate friend of the deceased for many years. She called on her Sunday, March 11, and Mrs. Wren told her that Lancton was jealous of her and was causing her a great deal of annoyance. She told witness that Lancton had threatened to kill her if she did not marry him, and said she felt as if she would like to go away.

Result of the Autopsy

Deputy Coroner Glazebrook testified that he performed an autopsy, on the body of Mrs. Wren at the Columbian University Hospital yesterday afternoon. Witness found no bruises or scars about the body. Upon removing the skull cap he found a tremendous hemorrhage on the left side of the head. The clot had pushed the brain to one side. He thought the hemorrhage had taken place more than a week before he performed the autopsy. The woman's skull was an unusually thick one and was not fractured. He said the woman's death was unquestionably due to the hemorrhage of the brain. There were no evidences of injury on the outside of the head. The vessel that had been ruptured is one that is usually affected in cases of violence. Injury may have been inflicted without making a bruise, or, if there had been a bruise, it had had time to disappear.

This closed the testimony and the case was submitted.

The remains were placed in a vault, and the interment is to be made in Congressional cemetery tomorrow evening.

His Death Mystery
No Clue to Injuries of Night Watchman Wrenn
Found Near Chevy Chase
Alden Smoot and Miss Eleanor Morgan Aid in Attempted Rescue
Coroner Will Hold Inquest
Dying Man Picked Up on Connecticut Avenue Far From Scene of His Work
An inquest is to be held by Coroner Nevitt at the District morgue tomorrow morning over the body of Walter S. Wren, a night watchman, of 1412 8th street northwest, who died at the Emergency Hospital last night, after he had been found badly injured, lying in the roadway on Connecticut avenue near Upton street.

Alden Smoot of 2630 Woodley place northwest, about 7 o'clock last night was driving his automobile north along Connecticut avenue when he noticed what appeared to be a body lying in the roadway near the car track. His car has only one seat and he had a companion with him. His first thought was to summon medical aid, and he drove on quickly to the Army and Navy Preparatory School and telephoned to the Emergency Hospital for an ambulance.

While he was at the telephone Miss Eleanor Morgan of Chevy Chase, came along in her automobile and seeing Wren, ordered her chauffeur to pick him up and place him in the car.

Fast Run to Hospital
Miss Morgan's car made a fast run to the hospital and Wren was immediately placed upon the operating table. His injuries were such, however, that the surgeons saw he had but a short time to live. Without regaining consciousness to tell how he received his injuries, he died about an hour after he was picked up.

The police were immediately notified of the finding of Wren and Inspector Boardman, chief of detectives, detailed Detectives Evans and O'Dea to make an investigation. It was a first thought that Wren had been run down by an automobile.

Detective Evans stated today, however, that his investigation led him to believe that Wren was struck by a car of the Chevy Chase line of the Capital Traction Company, about ten minutes before Mr. Smoot found him. It is thought that the watchman stood too near the car tracks and that the car, which extends quite a distance over either side of the track, "sideswiped" him.

Injuries Were Extensive
Wren's entire left side was injured. The left side of his head was cut, three ribs on that side crushed, his left arm and leg were also broken.

The detectives examined the car which passed the place a short time before Wren was found, but there were no marks on it. The motorman and conductor of the car declared that they did not see the man, if he was struck by their car.

Wren had been a night watchman for fifteen years, having for some time patrolled a section of 7th street above New York avenue northwest, which is in the second precinct. His wife died several years ago. They are survived by a sixteen-year-old daughter, Miss Ethel Wren. He left his home about 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon to go on duty. Just why he was out on Connecticut avenue is not known.

Arrangements for the funeral probably will not be completed until after the inquest tomorrow.

Killed By Accident
Jury Unable to Fix Responsibility for Walter Wrenn's Death
That he was accidentally struck by a moving vehicle, not identified, was the verdict of a coroner's jury at the morgue today which investigated the cause of the death of Walter S. Wren night watchman, who was found dying in the roadway of Connecticut avenue near Upton street Wednesday night.

The jury heard the testimony of a number of witnesses in the course of its investigation. The motorman and conductor of a street car that had passed the scene a few minutes before Wrenn's body was found were on the stand, but could throw no light on the cause of his injuries.

The verdict says that death was due to the crushing of bones of the chest and internal hemorrhage, believed to have been caused by Wrenn being "struck by some moving vehicle while he was walking along Connecticut avenue near Upton street."

this city. He was for some years a member of the board of common council of this city and held other positions of honor and trust with credit to himself and satisfaction to his friends.

The Evening Star, March 31, 1876
The Death of Mr. George Wright was briefly noticed in The Star of yesterday. Mr. Wright was before the Mexican War a soldier in the ordnance corps of the army, stationed at the Washington arsenal, where he, for some time superintended the making of cartridges for our forces in Mexico, and subsequently served in that campaign. While in the army he invented the celebrated percussion cap machine, which was at once adopted by our government, which paid him several thousand dollars for its use, and quite a number of the European nations purchased the machines from him. He continued at the arsenal until about three years ago, most of the time as master machinist, and during the late war he rendered good service to the government, managing his department, which at that time was frequently worked night and day, with great credit to himself, proving that he was possessed of marked administrative ability. He at the same time had the entire confidence of the commanding officers and the department. About three years ago he was transferred to the charge of the government shops at Fortress Monroe. A more faithful friend never lived. Mr. Wright was at one time a member of the City Councils of Washington, and he was a member of St. John's Lodge, No. 11, F.A.A.M., and of Eastern Lodge, No. 7, of Odd Fellows. Messrs. E.G. Wheeler and Thomas Cavanaugh, of St. John's Lodge, left yesterday, and with a committee of Monitor Lodge of Masons, No. 197, of Fortress Monroe, will arrive here with the remains tomorrow, and they will be taken to Masonic Hall, from whence the funeral will probably take place on Sunday.

A Severe Accident
We learn this morning, that James M. Wright, a clerk in the Judge Advocate's office, in the War Department, met with a very severe accident about a week ago, from the effects of which he has since been confined to his bed. He had taken passage on the cars for Bladensburg, and on the train arriving at the platform of the old landing place he supposed it would stop there, and prepared himself for jumping off. The train, however, kept on to a new stopping-place, and Mr. Wright jumped from it before its speed was sufficiently relaxed. He was thrown a considerable distance, and falling upon his head, sustained several very dangerous bruises. He is now in an improving condition, but has narrowly escaped with his life.

Wright, Thomas Croft
b. 1771 - d. 21 Jul 1841 70 yrs.
Wright. In Georgetown on Wednesday evening last, Thomas C. Wright, Esq. aged 70 years, one of the oldest inhabitants. His funeral will take place this afternoon at 5 o'clock from his late residence on High street.

The death of Mr. Thomas C. Wright, of Georgetown, has been already briefly noticed in the columns of the National Intelligencer. It is due, however, in the estimation of the present writer, a friend and fellow countryman of the deceased, to pay this additional tribute to departed worth. The memory of Thomas Croft Wright is justly endeared to a number of his surviving countrymen in the United States, to whom he was a kind friend and faithful adviser under many trying circumstances and vicissitudes of fortune; and by none of those fellow-countrymen are the excellent qualities and sterling virtues of the deceased more fully appreciated than by him who writes this obituary.

Thomas C. Wright, who departed this life at Georgetown, D.C. on the 24th instant, was born at Blakeney, in the county of Norfolk, England, in the year 1771. He emigrated to the United States in the year 1800, and settled himself as a merchant at Georgetown in the spring of 1801. During Mr. Wright's residence in Georgetown, which continued during the long period of forty years, he was esteemed for his frankness and probity; and although unfortunate in some extensive commercial enterprises, (through the failure of others in whom he placed too much confidence) and greatly embarrassed during the latter part of his life, Mr. W. continued to enjoy the esteem and respect of a numerous circle of friends, acquaintances, and fellow-countrymen—even of those who were sufferers by his unexpected and undeserved reverse of fortune. In the year 1818 Mr. Wright paid a visit to his native country, and through his favorable representations of the political, agricultural, and general prosperity of this thriving Republic, many English families, now residents in the District of Columbia, and in other parts of the Union, emigrated to the Western World, and bade a final adieu to the land of their nativity. In his political feelings and opinions Mr. Wright was a decided republican. No man who was born and raised in a limited Monarch ever cherished a more ardent attachment to the form of Government which had been so gloriously and happily established in the country of his adoption. Indeed, it may be truly asserted, that no individual in private life was ever more sincerely attached to the cause of civil and religious liberty all over the world than was Thomas Croft Wright.

To his fellow-countrymen who emigrated to this country by the inducement of his valuable and friendly advice—to those who were introduced to him by letter, or who had become casually known to him in the course of his extensive mercantile dealings, Mr. Wright was uniformly kind and affable—often aiding them in the hour of need and difficulty, not only with his purse, but with that sage and prudent counsel which, as they have since acknowledged, has conducted to their permanent prosperity and happiness. To such individuals the memory of Thomas C. Wright is peculiarly dear; but it is not to his fellow countrymen alone that Mr. Wright's memory is endeared by the most grateful and pleasing recollections. Thomas C. Wright was an upright and worthy man, highly esteemed by all who knew him. He was, indeed, a citizen of whom any country might feel proud, and whom any citizen might delight to honor. Peace to his ashes! W.T.

Wyer. Yesterday morning, about 8 o'clock, a few minutes after he had reached the Senate Chamber, of which he was Doorkeeper, Mr. Edward Wyer, aged about 62 years. He was in good health, apparently, up to the moment when, while speaking to one of the attendants of the Senate, he fell, and immediately expired without a word or a groan. Mr. W. was native of Boston, (Mass). He spent the earlier years of his manhood in the Navy, which, with a great deal of subsequent travel, made him known in many parts of the world, and whenever known his warm heart and gentlemanly bearing made him friends.

The Senate yesterday, as a mark of respect for their deceased officer, passed a resolution to adjourn at half past 3 o'clock this afternoon to attend his funeral, to which the attendance of his friends is likewise respectfully invited, at his late lodgings on Pennsylvania avenue.
